A PEACE PRIZE.

We fear newedays much about the heroes of war, and it is well that the nation should bear in mind the men also are prepared to follow the flag wherever it may lead them.

But all of the honors are not going to the men in autform. Neither are all the tributes being paid, as is sometimes the case, to the men whose claim to recognition is based on their ability to accommiste money.

Other achievements are getting their Among the men whom the land "delighteth to honor" is good John nurroughs, recently entered upon his seventy-righth year. To relebrate fittingly "seventy seven years of gracious accompilatment and accomplished grachoustons" friends of the post and natarnilet get together in a "John Harroughs week" marked by a general jubiles. It is a worthy work.

Great women and men accomplished in many lines of achievement are proud and glad to call John Burroughs their personal friend. They joined in the formal celebration and made merry with their guide to nature's ways.

But one can easily imagine the wood shock and the ant, the little wren and the lizard, the frog and tond and anake, with all their relatives in fur and feathers, assembling at the door of John Burroughs' bouse to wish him many more years of useful, happy life.

THE HILL OF TARA.

Where In Ancient Times the Kings of Ireland Were Crowned.

In the county of Meath is supposed to have stood the hall of Tura, relebrated as being the palace of the ancient Irish kings. There seems to be no doubt that on the hill of Tara the national assemblies met once a year to consult on the affairs of the kingdom and to make laws. The lawgivers were a class of druids called Brebons, who acted as magistrates and judges. They did not hold their courts of justice in any hall, but seated themselves on the top of a hill in the open air, where they heard all complaints that defense rather than as a sword to were brought before them and decided every cause according to their own ideas of right and wrong.

The hill of Tara is also famous in Irish history as the spot on which the kings were crowned. The throne, or seat of inauguration, was a black stone, which was called Lea Fail, or the fatal stone, said to have been brought in the early ages from Spain. and it was therefore beld in high veneration. It was either borrowed by Feargus the Great, an Irish chief, or else it was carried away, among other spolls, by the Scots in one of their invasions of Ireland and was ever afterward used as a coronation seat of the Scone until it was conveyed away by With her three children force of arms, together with the crown who placed it in Westminster abbey. where it still exists and forms the basis of the coronation chair to this day.

Roosevelt as a Woodchopper. When he owned a ranch in the west Theodore Roosevelt, as he says in his autobiography, "could chop fairly well for an amateur," but be admits that he could not do one-third of the work that his men did. "One day," he writes, "when we were cutting down the cottonwood trees to begin our building operations, I heard some one ask Dow what the total cut had been, and Dow, not realizing that I was within hearing, answered, 'Well, Bill cut down fifty-three, I cut fortynine, and the boss, he beavered down seventeen.' What Napoleon Said of Washington. They would have had me a Washington. The words cost nothing, and surely those who employed them with such facility did so without knowing to answer for want thereof, the plaineither times, or places, or men, or things. If I had been in America I would willingly have been a Washington, and I should have had but little merit, for I do not see how it would have been reasonably possible to do otherwise.

But if Washington had found himself in France, with disintegration going on within and invasion menaced from without, I would have defied Washington to be himself. If he had tried he would have been nothing but a fool.

HELPING SOME ONE.

Surely in the terrible days of the civil war there was no busier person in Washington and not one who bore a heavier burden of care and responsibility than Abraham Lincoln. Yet it is of him, more than of any other man of that time, that we hear he was always trying to help some one. There's the story that is told of his son Tad. It happened in a railroad station. The president was to take a trip, accompanied by Tad and others. A sightseer wanted to see Mr. Lincoln and de cided that the best way to find him was to ask Tad. "I don't know just where father is," said Tad, "but he's somewhere in there among the crowd. Just look around until you see some one helping some one else. That will be father."

The story does not tell whether the curious person found Mr. Lincoln or not. But it does tell a great deal about the president who could find temporary relief from his own troubles by assuming those of others. In serving others self service is done. There was the "jolly miller of the river Dee." for instance, who would not change places with the king of England. He discovered his happiness. you will remember, in working for "his wife and his children three." His unselfishness and content have become almost proverbial-because be served.

not because he was waited upon. Even in occupations that are seem ingly selfish and devoid of thought and care for others the rule holds true. Some of the biggest fortunes are those ing the demands of the world for articles of general consumption. The service in such cases is performed only incidentally and not from main purpose, but the benefits accrue to the performer as well as to those who are
