Personal controversies through the public press are in a general way unprofitable and I believe it has been your policy to avoid them. However, as this letter has been published it seems not out of place for me to reply and thank the Enterprise for the privilege.

For countless generations it has been the privilege of woman to hide identity in a controversy of this kind and the woman has been enfranchised in Oregon, it is not to be ex sected she could change age long habits in two years, therefore, I will not expect my critic to expose itself. O, Eternal Feminine! who may fath-

m you? You tell me to look close ome at Maple Lane, before I criticis Main street. There is no need of red lanterns hereabouts. If you will some inexpensive suggestion I would advise you to procure the serv ices of our road supervisor for a month or two and those danger posters could be taken down. It is not infrequent that auto parties from Oregon City take a trip over our smooth highways to soothe those racked nerves from a Main street trip. Years ago t used to cherish the hope that some time be-fore I had finished this earthly pligrimage I could take a trip on the elevator. But the sands of time run swiftly through the hour-glass of eternity and with advancing years one fears to undertake perilous journeys, even if one is compelled to travel Main street oc casionally. So the hope is fading. I am sure, Miss Merchant, that you are not acquainted with any of my neigh-bors or you would not suggest a probable law suit over line fences.

These people do not attempt to hog he earth and while we may get into a dispute over infant damnation, every one respects the personal rights of everyone else. Besides there is a maxim in this locality "That lawyers' houses are built upon the heads of Miss Merchant claims that the ministers are far above me. I am truly sorry for them if that is true; some may, but I think there are a few with whom I can meet on the broad plane of human-fellowship, even 10.

City in the front rank commercially. if they disagree with every line I Martin Klinge et ux. to M. Malden. There is more business done in my line write, in a general way. Some, I think conditions permit, feel an injury to any fellow creature is Ill to them It will perhaps be new to Miss Merchant, there was once a this ball of mud and murder who taught us equality. But the higher ups, the lawyers, judges and 'our best people" generally went after his goat, quite successfully, bit it brought such an "eruption" as to tear a big hole in the veil of distinction so that even the Dago soldiers could see the holy show. "You will probably have to come to one of these men in your nour of death," writes Miss Merchant No doubt "It" writes from personal experience; if so, there is no gainsaying, Your vulgar ridicule and affected utterances are no puzzle or delight or even interest to the thinking manmy critic says; no, but it seems to have interested one of the ladies and that is worth while.

I am advised to "curry down the old mare." That spavin-legged fleabitten old cayuse, not being used to that sort of a thing would be like my lines of truth for the first time, could not comprehend it and start a kicking "Clean up your hen roost" is anoth er one of those "your money back if not thoroughly satisfied". Advice I am offered "freely." If "It" had read the important news of the time "It" would have known that some one cleaned up my hen roost for me without money and without price and the service was regarded as equal in worth to my lit tle critic who seems to have thrown all the usual formalities to the wind in the manner I am addressed by m front Christian name, by one of such tender years.

"Be assured John that Main street is no place for you as yet." I usually have a shirt-tail full of farm produc to peddle in order to quiet the disturbence in my internal econemy I use the Merchant, mayn't I come to town once in a while? JOHN F. STARK.
