NEIGHBORHOOD ROW ENDS IN CITY COURT

CLIFFORD MILLIGAN CONVICTED ON CHARGE OF ASSAULTING WOMAN.

Convicted on a charge of assaulting Mrs. B. B. Smith of Fourteenth and John Adams streets, Clifford Milligan, aged 39 years, was fined $25 and given a jail sentence of 60 days by City Recorder Loder Thursday afternoon.

The trouble between Mrs. Smith and Milligan is alleged to have started Wednesday afternoon when the two met at the home of Peter Shilvill, where Milligan boards. The two exchanged words, it is said. Thursday noon, Mrs. Smith was in the Shilvill home again and Milligan attacked her near the house, according to the story told by the occupants of the house. He is alleged to have struck and choked her until the woman's husband, at his own home across the street, came on the run, knife in hand, in response to her call for help.

Milligan saw the approaching husband and picked up a heavy plank, striking Smith across the arm and knocking the knife to the ground. Chief Shaw was called and arrested Milligan early in the afternoon. In the recorder's court, Milligan did not deny he had struck Mrs. Smith and was responsible for the scars and bruises on her neck.

B. B. Smith, husband of the woman, is an employee of the Crown Willamette Paper company and has lived here some time. Milligan has been out of employment for several weeks.

SECOND MILWAUKIE INJUNCTION SOUGHT

TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER IS SIGNED BY COUNTY JUDGE ANDERSON.

BULL RUN PROJECT IS TIED UP

Milwaukie Water Company Maintains Franchise Gives Exclusive Right to Sell Water Until 1934.

For the second time within a few months the town of Milwaukie has been enjoined from obtaining a supply of Bull Run water, a temporary restraining order being obtained Tuesday by Attorneys U'Ren & Hesso, of Portland, acting for Milwaukie Water company, controlled by Theodore Fisch and R. M. Fisch.

It is alleged that this company has a 50 years franchise giving it the exclusive privilege until 1934 to furnish water to the people of Milwaukie. The injunction was issued by County Judge H. B. Anderson.

The original restraining order was obtained by Fred W. Birkenmeier upon technical grounds, but the circuit court ruled against him and he took an appeal, which is still pending in the supreme court. It is contended in the suit filed Tuesday that both parties in the Birkenmeier suit agreed to arbitrate the matter, and one of the express conditions of the arbitration agreement was that the town should not proceed with the Bull Run connection until the question had been determined, and that the contract between Milwaukie and the contracting firm of Gleich & Joplin should be held in abeyance until the termination of the matter.

The complaint sets up that the town of Milwaukie has through the contractors, who are made parties defendant in the action, proceeded with the work of laying mains to the Multnomah county line. "Say, do you mean that he is a detective?" "Yes," he said simply, "you can call him that—just in the same way that you could call Napoleon a soldier or Lincoln a statesman. He is a detective, if you like to call him that, the master detective in the world."

ROSE SOCIETY WOULD COMBINE GALA DAYS

The annual Booster Day, conducted under the auspices of the Commercial Club, and the Rose Show of the Oregon City Rose Society will be consolidated this year as in 1914 if the plan, authorized at a meeting of the Rose Society Wednesday afternoon, is carried out. A committee was appointed by Mrs. Angus Matheson, president of the society, to confer with the publicity committee of the Commercial club in regard to the matter. The scheme of combining the two annual events was tried out successfully a year ago and the results at that time were largely instrumental Wednesday in convincing the society that a joint celebration was desirable. The matter will be taken before the publicity committee of the Commercial club within a few days. It is considered likely that the backers of the Booster Day will agree to consolidate the two events.

FIRST INSTALLMENT "SANFORD QUEST, CRIMINOLOGIST"

The young man from the West had arrived in New York only that afternoon, and his cousin, town born and bred, had already embarked upon the task of showing him the great city. They occupied a table in a somewhat insignificant corner of one of New York's most famous roof garden restaurants. The place was crowded with diners. There were many notabilities to be pointed out. The town young man was very busy.

"Tell me," the country cousin inquired, "who is the man at a table by himself? The waiters speak to him as though he were a little god. Is he a millionaire, or a judge, or what?" "You're in luck, Alfred," the New Yorker declared. "That's the most interesting man in New York—one of the most interesting in the world. That's Sanford Quest."

"Sanford Quest is the greatest master in criminology the world has ever known. He is a magician, a scientist, the Pierpont Morgan of his profession."

"When Sanford Quest entered his house an hour later he glanced into two of the rooms on the ground floor, in which telegraph and telephone operators sat at their instruments. Then, by means of a small lift, he ascended to the top story and entered a large apartment wrapped in gloom until, as he crossed the threshold, he touched the switches of the electric lights. One realized then that this was a man of taste. Quest drew up an easy chair to the wide-fung window, touching a bell as he crossed the room. In a few moments the door was opened and closed noiselessly. A young woman entered with a bundle of papers.

"The criminologist glanced through the papers quickly. "No further inquiries, Laura!" She left the room almost noiselessly.

"THE TENEMENT" HOUSE MYSTERY.

"This habit of becoming late for breakfast," Lady Ashleigh remarked, as she sat down the coffee pot, "is growing upon your father. Any news, dear?"

Ella glanced up from a pile of correspondence through which she had been looking a little negligently. "None at all, mother. My correspondence is just the usual sort of rubbish—invitations and gossip. Such a lot of invitations, by the way."

"At your age," Lady Ashleigh declared, "that is the sort of correspondence which you should find interesting."

"You know I am not like that, mother," she protested. "My music is really the only part of life which absolutely appeals to me. Oh, why doesn't Delaney make up his mind and let father know, as he promised! . . . Here comes daddy, mum."

Lord Ashleigh loitered for a moment to raise the covers from the dishes upon a side table. Afterwards he seated himself at the table. "I heard this morning," he said, "from your friend Delaney. Ella. He went into the matter very fully. The substance of it is that for the first year of your musical training he advises your work."

"I have not finished yet. This cablegram," he went on, drawing a little slip of blue paper from his pocket, "was brought to me this morning."

"On Saturday?" Ella almost screamed. "I shall now," Lord Ashleigh said, "leave you to talk over and discuss this matter for the rest of the day. At dinner time tonight you can tell me your decision, or rather we will discuss it together."

"I am to take it, I believe," Lord Ashleigh began after dinner that evening. "that you have finally decided, Ella, to embrace our friend Delaney's suggestion and to leave us Saturday?"

"If you please," Ella murmured, "I am following you."

room. Ella pointed to the door. "Lenora, look outside. But if any one is on that landing, I fancy that the door opened."

"You will take your own maid with you, of course," Lord Ashleigh continued. "Lenora is a good girl and I am sure she will look after you quite well, but I have decided to supplement Lenora's surveillance over your comfort by sending with you, also, a sort of courier and general attendant—whom do you think? Well, Macdougall. He has lived in New York for some years, and you will doubtless find this a great advantage, Ella."

Ella glanced over her shoulder at the two servants who were standing discreetly in the background. Her eyes rested upon the pale, expressionless face of the man who during the last few years had enjoyed her father's confidence.

"For a moment a queer sense of apprehension troubled her. Was it true, she wondered, that she did not like the man? She banished the thought almost as soon as it was conceived.

"If you think so now," he remarked, "I do not know what you will say to me presently."

"Our diamonds!" Ella exclaimed. "The Ashleigh diamonds!" The necklace lay exposed to view, the wonderful stones flashing in the subdued light.

"In New York," Lord Ashleigh journeyed in public more, even, than in this country. Allow me!"

He leaned forward. With long, capable fingers he fastened the necklace around his daughter's neck.

"It is our farewell present to you," Lord Ashleigh declared.

Ella, impelled by some curious impulse which she could not quite understand, glanced quickly around to where the manservant was standing. For once she saw something besides

CHAPTER IV. There seemed to be nothing at all original in the methods pursued by the great criminologist when confronted with this tableau of death and robbery. His remarks to the inspector were few and perfunctory. He asked only a few laconic questions of Macdougall and Lenora, who were summoned to his presence.

Macdougall then turned to leave the room. Lenora was about to follow, but Quest signed to her to remain.

"I should like to have a little conversation with you about your mistress," he said to her pleasantly. "If you don't mind, I will ask you to accompany me in my car. I will send the man back with you."

They descended in the lift together and Quest handed the girl into his car. They drove quickly through the silent streets.

In a few minutes Lenora was installed in an easy chair in Quest's sitting-room.

"Lean back and make yourself comfortable," Quest invited, as he took a chair opposite to her. "I must just look through these papers."

The girl did as she was told. She opened her coat. The room was delightfully warm, almost overheated. A sense of rest crept over her. She was conscious that Quest had laid down the letters which he had been pretending to read. His eyes were fixed upon her. There was a queer new look in them, a strange new feeling creeping through her veins.

Quest's voice broke an unnatural silence. "You are anxious to telephone someone," he said. "You looked at both the booths as we came through the hotel. Then you remembered, I think, that he would not be there yet. Telephone now. The telephone is at your right hand. You know the number."

"Our Diamonds!" She Exclaimed. "The Ashleigh Diamonds!"

the perfect automaton. His eyes, instead of being fixed at the back of his master's chair, were simply riveted upon the stones. A queer little feeling of uneasiness disturbed Ella for the moment. It passed, however, as in glancing away her attention was once more attracted by the sparkle of the jewels upon her bosom.

CHAPTER III. The streets of New York were covered with a thin, powdery snow as the very luxurious car of Mrs. Delaney drew up outside the front of the Leland hotel, a little after midnight. Ella leaned over and kissed her hostess.

"Thank you, dear, ever so much, for your delightful dinner," she exclaimed, "and for bringing me home. As for the music, well, I can't talk about it. I am just going upstairs into my room to sit and think."

The car rolled off. Ella, a large umbrella held over her head by the doorkeeper, stepped up the little strip of dragage which led into the softly warmed hall of the Leland. Behind her came her maid, Lenora, and Macdougall, who had been riding on the box with the chauffeur. He paused for a moment to wipe the snow from his clothes as Ella crossed the hall to the lift. Lenora turned toward him. He whispered something in her ear. For a moment she shook. Then she turned away and followed her mistress upstairs.

Arrived in her apartment, Ella threw herself with a little sigh of content into a big easy-chair before the fire and gave herself up for a few moments to reverie.

A log stirred upon the fire. She leaned forward lazily to replace it and then stopped short. "Exactly opposite to her was a door which opened on to a back hall. It was used only by the servants. Just as she was in the act of leaning forward Ella became conscious of a curious hallucination. "Lenora, come here at once."

The maid hurried in from the next
