RAIDS MADE BY POLICE AND SHERIFF MONDAY IN CONDENSED FORM.

The Places Raided—The Moose lodge, No. 961; Cox's poolhall, Main street between Seventh and Eighth; Ernest E. Jones, confectionery, west end of suspension bridge; Charlie Young's restaurant, south Main street; Myers of Cox's poolhall; W. Reynolds, steward of the Moose lodge; Lee Fund, Chinese restaurant, east end of suspension bridge; Ernest E. Jones.

Those Who Will Face Liquor Charges, but Not Now Arrested—C. E. Noble, proprietor of Moose lodge; Ed. Brady, vice-dictator; P. Harlow, prolate; H. A. Shandy, treasurer; F. L. McGahay, secretary; Ben Eby, inner guard; Al Richardson, outer guard; and Frank Busch and Charles Baker, trustees and E. D. Cox, poolhall proprietor.

Fourteen men, including all the officers of the Moose Lodge, No. 961, will face charges of violating the state and city liquor ordinances following raids made Monday by Chief of Police Shaw, Sheriff Wilson and Constable Frost. The raids are by far the most sensational since Oregon City became dry over a year ago.

The action of the officers followed determination on the part of the council and City Attorney Schuebel to clean up the town. Two detectives were put to work two weeks ago Monday and the first of last week an executive meeting of the council was held to discuss the matter.

Detectives Join Lodge. The Moose lodge rooms was the first place visited Monday afternoon, the officers entering the building about 2:30 o'clock. Two detectives, under the name of H. R. Miller and Carl Wilson, have joined the lodge and City Attorney Schuebel claims, secured conclusive evidence. The officers went through the lodge but failed to find any liquor until the safe was opened and a bottle of wine and a second bottle of brandy found. In the attic of the building, the officers found 18 five-gallon canteens of the same variety taken several weeks ago by Constable Frost and Sheriff Wilson from a wagon driving toward Oregon City. The canteens were addressed Moose Lodge but no town was named on the packages.

The lodge rooms were entered without difficulty. Sheriff Wilson stepped to the door and rang the bell. W. Reynolds, steward of the lodge, came to the door and Sheriff Wilson entered the rooms, followed by Chief of Police Shaw and Constable Frost. Lodge Warned, Believe Officers. City Attorney Schuebel and the officers are convinced that the lodge had been warned and that almost all of what every liquor was on hand was taken from the building. The two detectives, who may they secured liquor at the club rooms last week, were refused admission Monday morning when they went to the lodge. Chief among the evidence secured against the lodge, is a federal liquor license. Last week City Attorney Schuebel visited the internal revenue collector's office in Portland and learned that a license had been issued to the lodge. The license was found in the club rooms and is held as evidence. It was secured almost a year ago and is made out to the Moose lodge, No. 961, C. S. Noble, dictator; D. F. Sheene, past dictator; P. L. McGahay, secretary. The license has not yet expired.

Automobile Flips In Mid-Air; 7 In Car Are Uninjured

BIG CAR IS HEAP OF SCRAP AFTER DOUBLE SOMERSAULT ON ELK ROCK HILL.

A passenger Stearns automobile is a heap of scrap, but its passengers, Mrs. Mason Kellogg, her driver, her four daughters and a woman companion are injured, although the car turned a double somersault late Sunday afternoon at a horseshoe bend on the hill leading down from Elk Rock. The party was driving from Portland to Oregon City, and had negotiated Elk Rock and started down the grade into Clackamas county, when the steering gear became unmanageable, and the brakes refused to hold the big machine which went over the bank.

The car landed squarely on its four wheels, and the top was up, which probably saved the lives of its occupants, who got out and scrambled up the bank. Mrs. Kellogg lives at 1112 Taylor street, Oregon City. The machine was purchased from the Pacific Highway garage about one year ago.

U. S. REPLY WILL BE FIRM; QUICK ANSWER IS CERTAIN

FRIENDLY RELATIONS BETWEEN TWO COUNTRIES MAY BE ENDED THIS WEEK.

SITUATION IS SERIOUS SAY MEMBERS OF ADMINISTRATION

Early Reply Will Leave no Room for Prolonged Discussion on Technicalities—Lusitania' Loss Explained.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—Germany must accept the American view that the submarine warfare as now conducted is in violation of international law, or assume responsibility for interrupting the friendly relations between the two governments. The president is determined not to enter a prolonged argument, it was stated in official circles today. He has decided not to modify the demands which were made upon Germany following the sinking of the Lusitania. The president's rejoinder to the latest note received from Germany will sweep aside all technicalities.

LAW OF NATIONS WILSON'S GUIDE IN ALL ACTIONS

PRESIDENT WILL INSIST ON THE RIGHT OF NEUTRALS TO TRAVEL.

NOTE TO GERMANY WILL PLACE ISSUE BEFORE ALL OTHERS

Early Answer to Demands is Expected From Berlin—Technical Discussion of Details to be Avoided.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—President Wilson determined today that the United States must ascertain definitely and promptly from Germany whether the imperial government intends in the future to be guided by the accepted principles of international law and the rights of neutrals or to follow its own rules of maritime warfare.

MEXICAN LEADERS ARE TOLD THEY MUST SETTLE THEIR DIFFERENCES AT ONCE

WASHINGTON, June 2.—All factions in Mexico were publicly called upon by President Wilson today in the name of the United States government "to accommodate their differences" and set up a government that can be accorded recognition.

Failure to unite in a movement to bring peace to Mexico "within a very short time" it was announced in a statement telegraphed to Generals Carranza, Villa, Zapata and others, would constrain the United States "to decide what means should be employed" in order to save the people of the southern republic from further devastations in internal warfare.

Everywhere—in official and diplomatic quarters and among Mexicans of varied leaning—the statement was interpreted as meaning that the United States would bring pressure to bear first to unite the factions in the choice of a provisional president and failing to bring all elements together, would give active support to those elements which did agree.

Intervention was considered as a possible ultimate development, but only if a hopeless condition of anarchy followed with no remedy from within the republic. The statement marks a departure in the policy of the Washington government toward Mexico. Its effect here was to start a variety of speculation as to what the American government meant by lending "its active moral support to some man or group of men, if such may be found in an effort to ignore if they cannot unite the warring factions of the country."

In high official quarters it was explained that the United States hitherto had maintained neutrality as between the factions, but now was preparing to choose between them or to give its support to those elements in the existing factions which gave most promise of success. WASHINGTON, June 1.—President Wilson determined today that the United States must ascertain definitely and promptly from Germany whether the imperial government intends in the future to be guided by the accepted principles of international law and the rights of neutrals or to follow its own rules of maritime warfare.

The questions of fact raised by Germany were regarded as irrelevant at this time. The trend of opinion was that the United States must inquire and obtain an early answer as to whether Germany intends to recognize the hitherto accepted principles of neutrals may travel anywhere on the high seas on unarmed merchant ships, whether or not such vessels carry contraband, and that in return which do not resist capture must be visited and searched and the passengers and crew transferred to a place of safety before the vessel is destroyed.

An unfavorable answer to this inquiry would lead to a severance of diplomatic relations on the ground that the United States could not continue intercourse with a government which repudiated these principles. Steps then would be taken to inform Americans of the dangers to which they were exposed, as a result of this action and such measures as necessary adopted to safeguard the lives and interests of citizens of the United States.

Intervention was considered as a possible ultimate development, but only if a hopeless condition of anarchy followed with no remedy from within the republic. The statement marks a departure in the policy of the Washington government toward Mexico. Its effect here was to start a variety of speculation as to what the American government meant by lending "its active moral support to some man or group of men, if such may be found in an effort to ignore if they cannot unite the warring factions of the country."

In high official quarters it was explained that the United States hitherto had maintained neutrality as between the factions, but now was preparing to choose between them or to give its support to those elements in the existing factions which gave most promise of success. An embargo on arms and the cut-ring off of other means of support in the United States would put into operation to assist the chosen elements as against those which ignored the American government's demand for peace. While details of the government's policy are not yet available, it was stated on good authority that it was intended to restore constitutional government in Mexico after the factions had agreed on a man for provisional president by first according recognition to Vasquez Tagle or some of the other members of the cabinet of the late President Madero entitled to succession under the Mexican laws. The minister so recognized would be expected to appoint to the cabinet the man chosen to head the new government, in whose favor he then would resign.

Ernesto Madero and Manuel Bonilla also were of the Madero cabinet, but Vasquez Tagle, minister of justice, was the only one who did not present his resignation.
