Judge Bell conducted the jurors over

He first led them to the bank of the Willaming river, at its junction with a small creek about 40 feet downstream from where Booth's body was found. From there he conducted them to the fence running from the road down the bank to the stream, beside which Booth was found dead, under a lump of trees.

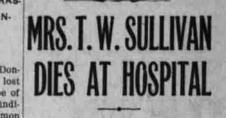

The river, swollen by rain, now runs several feet deep over the place where he fell with a bullet through his heart. Next, the jurors climbed the same fence, near the road, into the garden patch of Mrs. Anna Yates, who will be an important witness for the prosecu-
