CORE OF THE EARTH.

Its Form a Mystery, but the Globe, as a Whole, Is as Rigid as Steel. The theory that the crust of the earth is only a few miles in thickness and rests upon an intensely heated molten interior is no longer tenable. It is now knows that the earth, as a whole, pos sesses a high degree of effective rigidity, as great as if it were composed throughout of steel. It is no doubt true that the interior of the earth is in an intensely heated condition and that it appears to possess some of the qualitles of a fuld. At the same time it behaves in many respects as a solid.

Professor Milne concludes from the velocities of seismic waves at different depths that the materials and general characters of the crust of the earth that are found at the surface may extend to a depth of about thirty miles, but beyond that the material seems to merge into a fairly homogeneous nucleus. This state probably extends to a depth of six-tentis of the radius, but the remaining four-tenths form a core which differs in its physical and possibly its chemical constitution from the outer portion. What the state of this nucleus is must be a matter largely of conjecture until we have a fuller subjected to the vast pressure such as whole is at least as rigid as steel is furnished by a study of tidal phenomena and also by the variation of latitude. -St. Louis Post Dispatch.

Thousands, yes, hundreds of thou sands, of young people have injured their presents and discounted their futures by going into what they call "society." Yes, many men and women have sacrificed their souls upon the altar of "society."

Young people should have friends, they should not be bookworms or room hermits. They should intermingle, they should exchange experiences, play games of conversation, and other games; but all this does not mean "going into society," for "society" is commonly understood as simply another word for excess, with or without the winecup

It is a significant fact that our great merchant princes, our men of prodigious intellect, our famous discoverers and scientists, our men of mark in every walk of life, care more for sociability than for society, and not one in a hundred of them is in "so friends among their kind, and enjoy a fig" whether Mrs Tone invites them $56.95. to her most exclusive ball, or whether Mr. Highbrow includes them in his list of dinner guests. Many men of wealth, and more men who haven't any, sacrifice the vitality of life to get into "society," and when they get in they spend half of their time keeping in. When they become old enough to know better, they go out into Nature's out-of-doors, breathe the fresh air, and mentally, and some times physically, kick themselves for the folly of their silly ambition.
