

VESTERLIDE SNAPS LINE; RIVER BOAT IS CRUSHED

PORTLAND, Ore., March 31.—Caught between a boom of logs and the stern of the steamer Vesterlide at Inman-Poulsen's dock about 2:15 yesterday afternoon, the Vesterlide having borne down on her after being launched at the Northwest Steel company's yard, the steamer Ruth, of the Willamette Navigation company's fleet, was crushed amidships and sank soon after.

Three of her crew suffered injuries to limbs in jumping to escape the impact, and others, including two women, had narrow escapes. The injured are Harry Carlson, fireman, who stood by his post as pumps were ordered after the crash, his right ankle and instep being badly crushed between logs of the boom onto which he jumped at the last moment; Joseph Hanley, deckboy, whose hip is injured and who was severely bruised through being knocked about under the logs, where he was held for a time, and James J. Laugerbaugh, deckhand, whose hip was bruised and who was otherwise shaken up.

When the Vesterlide left the ways two seven-inch hawsers, with which it was hoped to check the way somewhat, broke and on gaining midstream she swung by the current, so her course was diagonal with the river. Captain Pearson of the Columbia River Pilots' association, who was on deck and in charge of the ship, as well as a number of shippers, cried to Captain O. F. Hegdale, master of the Ruth, to haul out of the way.

From Farm to City

How a Country Boy Became a Lion in Society.

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Sam Atkins was a farmer boy. Sam had met Jennie Williams at a barn dance, and then there had commenced the union of hearts that grows stronger quickly when planted in youthful breasts.

One day Sam was running his car on the road and just about to turn into the farm gate when he heard another car coming behind him.

Sam was off the road, so that he escaped the car, which was evidently beyond the lady's control. As soon as she had passed him he gave chase, passed her, shut off power in his machine, jumped out and as the other car went by him jumped on to the footboard.

ing, and even then he would smack of the country. The result was that Mrs. Idleton issued invitations for a ball at her city residence.

The Idleton ball was one of the very largest of the season. It was not given at the town residence of the Idletons, but at Swinton's, a fashionable restaurant with entertaining rooms on the higher floors.

Sam went right away to his sweet-heart and told her of his adventure and its result. Jennie looked grave and told him that he would never be satisfied again with country life.

Now, Jennie was an excellent seamstress and was doing some sewing for Mrs. Treborne, a wealthy woman who spent her summers at her country residence, half a dozen miles from Jennie's home.

Jennie looked up at her questioner with a radiance that was a more speaking reply than words. Then her employer said that she had been thinking of the matter and resolved to do for her what was to be done for Sam.

It was a month after Jennie and Sam entered upon preparation for an entry into fashionable life that the dancing master reported to Mrs. Idleton that Sam Atkins was as well prepared to attend a ball in high life as he could be, except by a long period of coach-life. It seemed that at its time was taken up trying to avoid breaking in upon good manners. He was introduced to clubs, but he did not see that the men he met there had anything to do but drink cocktails and smoke.

Jennie had returned to her home the day after the ball. The day Sam returned she was taking a walk down the road when Sam, who had donned his country clothes, came along in the wagon. Seeing her, he jumped out and folded her in his arms.

There before him, robed in a cloud of silk and lace, smiling at him, was Jennie Williams.

PARIS NOTES.

What the Parisians Are Turning Out For Spring.

What is lost in the width of the new skirts for spring is added to the length in the proportion of a yard to an inch. Skirts are now inches longer and certainly yards narrower.

Paquin uses it in an afternoon gown with a Russian blouse effect in the fastenings of the buttons down one side. Otherwise the frock has straight lines—that is, the waist is not fitted snugly as it is in many of the new spring creations.

They are joined just below the hips, and at this point the skirt is much wider than at the bottom where it is drawn in considerably.
