Macksburg

MACKSBURG, June 28.—Now that the seeding rush is over, the attention of the ranch-folk turns to the appearance of their environs. The green turf—so costly a luxury in many parts of the world, northern California for example, where it is so sandy that earth must be brought from a distance for the growth of grass, and where it cannot thrive without constant irrigation—may be had here by simply raking off the rubbish, cutting it, occasionally. The rainy season continues so late that the grass retains its freshness until almost time for the rain again. The children of western Oregon can truly say "Oh green is the turf where my brothers play in the long bright hours of a summer's day."

Then, the flowers! Nowhere as thick in Florida, the land of flowers, are roses seen in such wanton profusion, in such bewildering variety or in such wonderful beauty as in this corner of the earth, with the Pacific ocean sending them moisture from the west and the Cascade mountains shielding them from the blasting heat of the east. In every hue from snowy white through all the shades of pink and red to a dark crimson that is almost black, some blending two colors, such as a pale yellow with the faintest pink or green in the same rose. So easily are they grown, the most toil-worn housewife need not be without them. Like the strawberry they require no protection from the weather and like the strawberry they are with us before the other flowers and fruit.

Nowhere are wild flowers in greater profusion and beauty than here. Just now the Indian arrowwood, a tree bearing great plumes of pale yellow flowers is in its greatest beauty, set off by the tender green of newly-grown fir, this again enlivened by the vivid scarlet of the wild honeysuckle.

Still Praises Doan's.
