REPUBLICAN ACHIEVEMENT

The greatest achievement of the United States since its entry into the war, is the enactment of the selective conscription law. That law, placed upon the statute books by the chosen representatives of the people, is a solemn declaration by the entire country of its deliberate purpose to not merely do its bit but to do its best, in the conflict to which it became a party. It was a declaration that justice shall be done among our own people-that each shall bear his share of the burden of carrying on the war, so far as personal service and sacrifice are concerned. It was an announcement to all the worldto the Teutonic powers as well as to the allies-that we entered this war with unwavering determination to do all that is needed to make a victory complete.

The next greatest achievement was the authorization of a $7,000,000,000 war loan and the floating of a two-billion dollar bond issue. This also was a notice to all the world-notification that money will be available to properly equip the men we are to send to the front, and that we shall not only supply our own armies but shall aid in supplying the armies of those with whom we are allied.

Neither in the declaration of war nor in the enactment of the two most important measures incident to the war, was there any party line drawn, nor any manifestation of partisan feeling. There was some disagreement, to be sure, but members of both parties were on both sides of the questions presented. In the case of the selective conscription bill, the Democratic leader of the military committee of the house was anagonistic to the measure, and the bill was placed in charge of the ranking Republican member of the committee. While it is true that these measures met their strongest opposition from Democrats, the opposition was a matter of individual action and not partisan.

The military, naval and aviation appropriation bills are minor matters, but the promptness with which they were passed and the readiness with which the minority party aided the majority, were convincing evidence of the unanimity of the American people in waging war upon a ruthless despotism.

It is a rather strange circumstance that the food control bill which is undoubtedly the least important of the war measures, has received the largest amount of discussion in congress. The administration put forth its greatest efforts in behalf of that legislation, and it met there the greatest opposition. In this, as in other matters, the controversy followed no party lines. In fact, the strongest opponents of the bill were members of the president's own party. Viewing the record of war proceedings to date, the Republican party and its representatives have good cause for felicitation. Notwithstanding the president has been intensely partisan in his appointments, even since we entered the war, the representatives of the Republican party have stifled any feeling of resentment and have not permitted party feeling to influence their course in the least. They have left the exercise of partisanship to the party in power.

and had to pay hospital bills, the thing begins to look sering. After one has been through a smash and has been laid ious.

One trouble is that in most places the local police dislike to enforce the law strictly, being fearful of making enemies. Every county does not have a Traffic Officer Meads. It is all right arresting thieves and drunks who have no friends. To file a complaint against some socially influential persons, who never feels competent to drive until he has tuckd away several highballs, is another proposition.

Yet public sentiment will support strict enforcement of the law. The people of any neighborhood know who the speeders are. Let them notify some official who will complain to the motor licensing authorities. These authorities have detectives on the trial of all alleged speeders.

This done, it is easy to secure evidence. Once a man gets the scorching habit, he keeps it up. He is not content with any beggarly 25 miles an hour, but with a whoop he opens his in the line of food conservation, it is hrottle, regardless of obstructions to view and other traffic. Fines do not influence him. Juries are too good natured to could be avoided if farmers and butch. One-half mile run. $100. ail him. Let him lose his operator's license a year or two, and he will take notice and others like him also.

THE 1918 FOOD CAMPAIGN

The food production campaign as a war measure necessar- demned 18,426 ily came late this year. War was not declared until April. was killed and dressed by farmers. By that time the farmers' plans for the season were practically made. Little could be done except to get a lot of people work- the meat but simply on account of ing in a small way on home gardens. This was useful, but for any big production we must look to our professional food raisers, the farmers.

Now it is a principle of human effort that you can get more out of people by going direct to them and stating your case before being offered to the transporta than in any other way. If a board of trade wants to raise mo- tion company for shipment ney for a public object, it can't do it merely by issuing general statements. Every one says "Let George do it." The board the other in the abdominal cavity, so May was appointed federal hunter for officials must get out among Smith and Jones, and tell them as to spread the carcass and hold it this district and who makes his headthey ought to help and that they must. Under personal pres- pounds it would be well to have them headwaters of the Clackamas river, is sure, they come across.

It is the same way with the government. The whole country should be organized. There should be committees for ev- of the yeal with hot water and wipe January 1917, until his government apery state, county, and town. Every farmer should be interviewed in a friendly way by his home committee. They should sprinkling of cayenne pepper on the in- bear, one coyote and several smaller ask him to go the limit to increase his area of cultivated crops. Under that solicitation, a great many pledges of such increase will be made and kept.

In a great many cases such committees would find that the farmer would like to raise more, but can't on account of some difficulty. He may need more equipment. If so, and if he is a person fairly entitled to receive credit, the interest of some bank or lending company should be solicited to help him out. In a great many cases, the lack is simply that the farmer can't get help. That situation should be similarly taken up. and everything possible done to meet the need. In these ways a big increase over even the present large production can be secured. It will not merely help to win the war, but it will

LABOR THAT DOESN'T HELP.

The man who walks through any sizable city about now, must be impressed with the great number of men whose labor, as far as winning this war goes, is not productive. Not merely are there a host of men acting in such useless functions as agents canvassing from house to house, but a large part of the petty machinery of distribution is nearly useless.

Take for instance the great number of able bodied men employed at little peanut, fruit, cigar, chewing gum, and soft drink stands. All these wants, in so far as they are legitimate, can be supplied at drug and grocery stores in the centers of population. Yet these little trades spring up at every street lator." corner. A large number of men get a precarious living at them because they cut up the business into small units that are not economically conducted. Where business is concentrated into a few well advertised places, it is done cheaper. Where it is widely scattered in a lot of small places, it costs more for each article sold.

About the only reason for their existence is that the people in that particular neighborhood will buy there rather than walk a quartr of a mile to some regular retail store. But in any large city there are hundreds of these little places that serve no real need. If they closed up, no human want would be unsupplied. Meanwhile the farmers are crying for more help, and there is a shortage of labor in all departments.

These little stands and shops seem to appeal to certain men of a rather idle type. Perhaps some of them have suffered accidents o rare physically unable to work. But the majority look able bodied. They should be hoeing corn or building ships or making munitions.

RECKLES SMOTORISTS

When one complains of reckless driving of automobiles, many people take the easy going view that as 95 per cent of motorists are cautious drivers, it is not worth while to take severe measures. It is probably true that no more than five per taking American citizens long resident cent could be called reckless. Yet five people can make things in Germany for military service on the mighty uncomfortable and perilous for the other 95.
