Macksburg

MACKSBURG, Ore., Oct. 3.—Hard, indeed would it be to find pencil to describe or pen to depict lovelier days than these through which we are passing now. The temperature is of that exquisite degree that combines the luxurious warmth of summer with the exhilarating tingle of approaching frost. The clear sky is giving an unclouded view of that wonderful work of Nature, Mt. Hood, which is becoming visible to more and more of the ranchers as the timber is cleared away. Not one of us could tell in which of its varied aspects this crowning wonder of our state delights us most, whether when dark as the river of death in the struggling lights of early dawn he appears, distinguished only by his towering heights from the adjacent hills passing then thru every changing line from sombre gray to a lovely rose color so enchanting, we wish it might never change, till at mid-day it stands white and resplendent in the full blaze of the noon-tide sun. So stupendous is the sight one wishes for the soul and the pen of St. John writing—in his lonely isle—of the gloria of the Celestial Land, but, while we are thinking, the glister of the snowy surface in the morning sun has disappeared, leaving what seems a colossal pile of snowy marble. Then it is easy to believe that it has been here since the creation and we wish it might speak to us of the deluge that covered the earth. We love to think of its sublime immobility as typical of the solidity of our beloved commonwealth and that as he then arose serene and unblemished from that turbid flood so our government is to emerge from the turmoil of this world-conflict, status-quo solidified and untarnished to shine on in heaven's pure radiance till time shall be no more.
