Macksburg

MACKSBURG, Ore., Oct. 18.—Whether Mother Nature was awake to our importance in the great problem of world-feeding or not, we may never know, but certain it is that in her treatment of that necessary staple, the potato, she has shown considerable wisdom and skill. The planting unavoidably late owing to protracted rain, resulted in a retarded summer growth, so little progress was made in the usual time for growing that after failure of the crop must have taken place had there been early frost, but instead of this the middle of September found the parched and thirsty soil rejoicing in the moisture from a warm and copious rain, which set the forces of nature at work with all the impetus of a pent-up flood, producing an increase in the number and size of the tubers that was wonderful to see, and, now, a month of rainless weather has put the ground into ideal shape for the harvest, none of that depressing work, digging in the rain. No handling of potatoes encrusted with adhesive clay, while wading through the water-soaked soil. The cloudless sky and bracing atmosphere make the potato gathering a delight. Men, women and children take up the tubers thrown out by the digger with a rapidity that would be incredible to one who was not there to see. The agreeable stimulus too, of a good price is not wanting and the determination to have a larger acreage in potatoes for another year is firmly gaining ground.

The wheat for 1918, is already above ground, and is promising well. Many a tangled field green with this crop, now, was but a tangle a few months ago.

Meanwhile the delayed frost is allowing us a new lease of enjoyment in the autumn flowers. To say nothing of the roses, fewer in numbers, but not less lovely in colors than in early summer there are the dahlias affording a veritable riot of gorgeous description in perfection of form and beauty of hue. Asters, nasturtiums and cosmos, are still, holding their own and keeping the garden bright to the view, while the ear is charmed by the notes of that constant little friend the meadow-lark, who sings on while most of his comrades have left us for their southern clime.
