"Miss Mystery" and "Mr. Stranger" 3 By FRANCES B. LINSKY

Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspa

"You are cordially invited to attend a dance to be given by the employees of this hotel on Wednesday evening. Dancing in the garage from 8:30 to 10 o'clock. Please come with escort."

Anue frowned when she read the little card. When school had shut down very unexpectedly for an enforced vacation, she had felt that she must carn some extra money. The result was that she had accepted a socalled "war time" position in one of the suburban hotels, but that such a position has its difficulties, and is mighty different from teaching school, Anne was just beginning to find out. "I really can't go," she told herself.

"I hardly know any of the people who will be there. And besides I haven't any young man to ask for my escort."

"Oh, there's Mr. Stevens," as the manager of the hotel came into the "Til ask him to advise me what lobby. to do," and she hurried over to meet

He greeted her with a pleasant smile for he had taken great interest in the girl who had come to him when school had closed and frankly told him of her desire to earn more money in order to fit herself for "bigger things." He listened carefully to the story of her difficulty.

"Why, I'd just look in for half an hour, if I were you," he said, when she had finished; "you needn't dance if you don't wirnt to, and your lack of an escort will give you sufficient excuse, but I think you'd better go if only for a few minutes, so that the others won't think you are trying to be different."

Anne thanked him, and hurried off, wondering why she hadn't thought of that herself, and resolved that she would look her prettiest, even if she didn't particularly care about going. After dinner, she went to her little under the eaves, to don her room party gown.

"Goodness! How gay we shall be!" she exclaimed to herself, as she shook out her dress. "I wonder if I haven't been to a party since the farewell evening that the teachers gave to the old superintendent. Wonder what the new man 'll be like," and her mind wandered off to the subject that lay nearest her heart-school,

"They say he's young and quite fascianting," she thought, "and I suppose that means that all the teachers in the district will set their caps for him. But here's one that won't." And she jabbed a hairpin in with extra force, for Anne had "ideas" on the subject of "Men."

The last lock of hair securely fastened, and the last frill on the dress alternately coaxed and patted into place, Anne sallied forth alone to the garage which had been transformed into a dance hall for the evening's festivities, quite surprised to find her-

"Well, then, may I have the pleasure?" asked the young man quickly, and as Anne nodded consent, he added. "I'll join you here in just a minute," and went off to look after his machine.

As they glided over the floor together, Anne gave herself up completely to the pleasure of dancing with a partner whose step matched hers perfectly. and it was not until the end of their third dance together that she decided that it was time for her to go.

"Just wait for one more dance," pleaded her companion, "for I shall be going myself then. I have rather a long run to make tonight, and besides after these dances with you, I don't feel that I want to dance with anyone else here.'

Anne looked up with a smile at the very obvious compliment, and, as if by common impulse, they moved toward the lawn, to stroll up and down in the moonlight during the intermission.

Anne found her companion a most interesting talker, as he told her of the various places he had visited, and the strains of music that announced the next dance came all too soon. "I think you have been most fortunate in your choice of an employer." she said to him, as they entered the dancing room again.

"My employer? Why just what do you mean?" asked the young man. "Why," said the girl, "not many chauffeurs are privileged to see as much of the country as you apparently have, judging from your conversa-

"Not many chauffeurs," repeated the young man, a rather puzzled look on his face-"why-er-" as a thought struck him, "why, yes, I guess I am rather lucky at that, although I'm afraid I hadn't really appreciated it until you spoke."

Once more they glided off, and at the end of the dance Anne held out her hand.

"It has been a very pleasant eve (Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper ning," she said. "Thank you for hav-Richard Ellis viewed from the hill ing helped to make it so. Good night, Mr. Stranger." the miles he would have to walk in or-
