He also sang his new song on shipbuilding, "We Build the Ships for Uncle Sam," which he is just copyrighting. The song is quite popular in the shipyards, and the yard paper has commented quite favorably upon it. Mr. Dye, who presided, to close made a few remarks on the Scotch people, who have contributed nearly nine-tenths of the leading people of all kind in the United States, told how Napoleon and the Kaiser hates the fighting qualities of the "Women of Hell," the probability that the Scotch adopted the old Roman costume, how the Scotch were the back bone of the "First Hundred Thousand" that went across to meet the Germans, how thousands of Scotchmen in America would do the Kilts, just as they do in England, if it were the custom here, that the King of England wears the costume and that it is probable that the psychological effect of wearing this costume, which is just a costume merely, no doubt has had much to do with the great fighting and stick-to-it-ive qualities of the Scot. Announcement was made for a program next Saturday evening to raise money for special grange purposes.
