which swept into Portland early this afternoon, halting streetcar traffic. clashing with high voltage electric wires, hitting telephone poles and sending down four-hundredths of an inch of rain in a few minutes. The thunder claps were the sharpest heard in Portland in a long time. The temperature jumped from 82 degrees at 2 o'clock to 91 degrees at 6 o'clock. The humidity fmmediately after the storm was oppressing and a blanket of clouds hovered low enough over the city to increase the unusual effect. The storm was one of those rare electrical disturbances which flit through Portland only every year or so and as usual no lasting damage was done. Brief tie-ups resulted on a number of the street car lines, because the lightning struck the trolley wires or poles and passed into the motors and controllers. In many instances the motors were burned out and the cars were stalled. One high voltage wire was sent to the street at East Ash and Grand Avenue.

A street car at Third and Burnside streets was struck with the first flash of lightning and the flames shot out far into the street. The passengers were unhurt however. Both motors and the controllers were burned out and traffic was held up for consider-
