CLASS OF 1918 FALLS SHORT

One hundred and eighty-nine registrations were made by Clerk Harrington and assistants Wednesday, the number falling a little short of the estimated figures, based on registrations a year ago. This is due to the fact that many of the boys are already in the service, and could not registered yesterday. It was thought there would be about 250.

FIND NEW ROAD TO DODGE BUMPS

Opposition of property owners along 17th street in Portland has blocked the proposed improvement of the strip between the ends of the paved roadway in Clackamas county and the paved streets of Portland.

For more than a year, this strip has been in deplorable condition, and attention of the Portland authorities was called to this fact by members of the Live Wires. Assurance was received by Mayor Baker that immediate steps would be taken to repair the strip and make a continuous paved highway between Portland and Clackamas county on this route.

Proceedings were then begun by the Department of Public Works in Portland for the improvement, A 26 Douglas, Chester, Oregon City; Dein- foot strip of asphaltic dressing laid on the macadam bed was proposed.

PORTLAND MAN DIES IN EFFORT TO SAVE WOMAN

Emmett L. Allen, a riveter employed at a Portland ship yard, and whose home is at 930 Hood street, that city, gave his life on Sunday afternoon while attempting to save Miss Wilma Woodfin, a 20 year old former Oregon City girl, from drowning in the Clackamas river, just below the Southern Pacific bridge. Although Allen lost his life in his heroic effort to rescue the girl, she was saved from a watery grave by the timely assistance of Leonard Bayless, another Portlander who was on a picnic near the banks of the stream.

Miss Woodfin, who had moved to Portland two months ago, was spend ing the day visiting here, in company with Miss Helen . Lucas and Miss Mary Lucas, of Parkplace, had gone to the river for a dip. All three of the girls are proficient swimmers, al though Miss Woodfin was not used to the colder water of the Clackamas, The Lucas girls have swam the river at Parkplace a number of times, and were able to withstand the chill. In an effort to swim from the Parkplace side across to Gladstone, Miss Helen Lucas and Miss Woodfin struck out, and when about half way, where the swift current comes in, Miss Lucas heard her companion say she could go no farther. She was told to turn over and float, and Miss Lucas made a valient effort to support her, but could not in the swift stream. Just as Miss Woodfin was preparing to float, a wave struck her in the face, causing her to swallow considerable water, and she was seen to go under. Then Miss Lucas gave the alarm and Mr. Allen, who was fishing from the shore on the Gladstone side, in company with his wife, struck out after the drowning girl. Miss Lucas says that he did not stop to take off either his coat or his boots, and while he started out strong, by the time he passed her he was considerably winded, and was heard to groan. But short time before he had partaken of a hearty lunch, and this, coupled with the chill of the icy water was more than he could stand. After reaching Miss Woodfin, he supported her for several yards, back toward the Parkplace shore, where the current was not so swift. When about twenty feet from the bank, he was heard to shout, 'I can't stand it boys, I'm gone," and he raised his hands and sank.

Leonard Bayless, another Portlander, was a little ways below, and as he saw Allen go down, he hurriedly kicked off his shoes and made his way to the side of the struggling girl, who was about to go under again. He got her safely to shore, with the assistance of two men and a skiff which was nearby, but Allen did not again appear on the surface.

His body was located a few hunded feet below by George Himler, a Parkplace fisherman, and a young lad dived down and brought it to the top. The body was in about 12 feet of water. A physician and a nurse, with a pulmotor, were hastened to the scene by the Portland, Railway Light for an hour it was seen that efforts dently not occurred to him. at resuscitation were unavailing. The SENSAIIUNAL CASE at resuscitation were mayalling. The remains were brought to this city, but were later removed to the Miller and Tracey undertaking establishment in Portland, Besides a wife, Allen is survived by his father and mother. He was about 40 years of age.

Miss Woodfin, whose nevres were badly shattered by the accident, was taken to the Lucas home, where she rested until six o'clock Monday evening, when she returned to Portland.
