WHAT ENTHUSIASM DOES IN WAR

The chief problem in the business world is meeting the great demand for man power to keep our industries going. We now expect to place 4,000,000 men in France by next June. The places of these producers have all to be filled. We have got to turn out a great quantity of supplies and munitions to back them up, in addition to ordinary material for use in daily home life. The supplies the army consumes will represent far more labor and material than this number of men would use in peace times. All sources of supply to fill the labor shortage will be ransacked. Boys, women and girls, non-essential workers, each of these sources is a problem in itself. But there is one great source of increased production. That is enthusiasm not to be overlooked. Enthusiasm, no ball game was ever won without enthusiasm. Under a fever man capable of arousing the spirit of his men, a gang of work employes will do 50 per cent more. Now let us get that spirit into all. People can do far more if they feel our war work. Let us take hold of it in the way we would take hold of in a ball game or carry an election. Here are our boys on the verge of victory. It needs a long hard pull to put them over, but we are beginning to see signs of the end. No longer can it be said that the German line is impregnable. It has been broken again and again. Our boys are just the ones who can do it. But everyone who is raising food or making munitions or war supplies, or producing any valuable essential material, must put his heart into it. If we will all jump to our tasks with the determination to raise our industrial efficiency to highest pitch, the boys "over there" will take care of the rest. Come on then with a Hurrah!
