Bob Smith, President

The election of Mr. Robert E. Smith, as president of the Title & Trust Co., of Portland, is a deserved recognition of the sterling qualities of one of our best known citizens. Smith hails from Roseburg, where he was in the abstract and banking business for several years, and up to two years ago he achieved some prominence by conceiving and putting across the six per cent tax limitation amendment, which we still have with us.

Mr. Smith's real opportunity for achievement came, however, with the great war. His executive ability came into play and his carefully laid plans in putting Oregon over the top in successive Liberty Loan campaigns brought his name more than state-wide renown. As executive manager for the Liberty Loan organization, he made good, and his return to private life will probably be better for his own pocket-book but the public has lost an active worker.

We cannot assume, however, that Mr. Smith's temperament will permit his retirement altogether. Like other men with constructive characters, he may be expected to be heard from whenever and wherever he may be of service to his neighbors and friends in every section of Oregon.

Bob Smith will never be found sleeping on the job.

TRAMP BIRD APPEARS AT JACK HOME AND MAKES NICE NEW NEST

Mrs. J. E. Jack, being a lover of birds, and owning a number at her home at Ninth and Washington streets, has a new one added to her family of birds, that could be well named "Tramp," and it is now one of the most important "tramps" that ever struck Oregon City.

About a month ago Mr. Jack was engaged in cutting the lawn at the Jack home and the canary birds enjoying their freedom in a screen porch seemed to enjoy the noise made by the mower, and were filling the air with sweet tones, when "tramp" appeared. She was bound to enter the screened porch, and Mr. Jack allowed her to. She at once made herself at home, and is now a big pal of the other birds. She has made herself a nest, and this has been built in a white felt hat, owned by George R. H. Miller, father of Mrs. Jack, and which is hung on the wall. Mr. Miller who is one of the oldest members of the Elks Lodge, and the oldest in this city, prized this hat very highly, for it was the first Elks hat he owned and which he wore in an Elks parade in Portland a number of years ago. Mr. Miller when discovering the bird's nest in his prize hat, exclaimed "Well I'll not disturb that little bird, for she knows a good thing when she sees it—an Elks' hat, so birdie can stay in that hat as long as she desires." She has laid her first egg at the Jack home, and is one of the proudest little birds there.
