WOMAN'S PAGE by Florence Riddick Boys

CHILDREN

How empty and arid our souls would grow If we lived for ourselves alone; If we did not have children, and love them so That their interests outweigh our own!

Children that give to our labors zest, Give us motive to strive and be. Oh, the mother of children is richly blest! I am glad mine were sent to me!

OPEN DOORS IN BUSINESS

The advance agent goes out ahead of a play, a moving picture, a concert, or any entertainment and prepares the way. She arrives in the town about ten days ahead of the attraction and arranges the advertising, with the manager of the theatre, looks up the trains, speaks for hotel accommodations, provides for transportation of baggage and often talks with editors and gets notices in the paper, sometimes writing press notices herself and seeing that photographs are out in public places. Women are proving more reliable on this job than men as they are more steady and stick closer to business. Often, too, they can prevail upon newspapers to accept publicity which would be refused to a man.

THE ADVANCE AGENT.

The advance woman agent receives from $60 to $125 a week and her railroad fare. She must pay her own living expenses. Only a woman of experience can make good at this job, but young girls may prepare for it. This is done by obtaining a job in a theatrical office and learning all she can. The woman who is a success in this work must dress well and be pleasing in appearance and yet know how to keep her dignity and repel undue freedom on the part of others. It keeps her traveling all the time and while that may be pleasant for a time, it becomes very wearisome after a while. When it does the woman who has been successful in this important position is certain to find some other job waiting for her in the home office of the theatrical company.

A HOME-MADE REFRIGERATOR OR FIRELESS COOKER

For those doing light housekeeping; or wishing it only temporarily; or who cannot afford a "regular" fireless cooker or refrigerator, or the ice, it takes to run one, an inexpensive little refrigerator or fireless cooker may be made at home. The same contrivance may serve in either capacity on demand. To make such a convenience one needs a covered lard can or deep enough to hold milk bottles and ice broken up around them. This sits inside another pail a trifle larger and deeper. The smaller can or pail may be removed and cleaned at will but the larger one is stationary. A wooden box is good for this, or a very larger lard can, or butter firkin—filled with saw dust all around the middle can or pail. The saw dust keeps the air from changing the temperature of the inside containers, which may be used either as ice-box or fireless cooker. The principle of both is the objects set inside this secluded spot will remain practically the temperature they were when placed there, depending on the thoroughness of the insulation of outer air. A saw-dust cushion to fit, or a fitted pad of fifty layers of newspapers should cover the outer can to protect the top as the sawdust protects the sides from the air. All covers and fittings should be as tight and close as possible. If this is used for a fireless cooker, the fewer times it is opened during use the better; as each time will let that heat escape. It is an improvement to use a hot radiator, as the round soapstones for this use are called. With this the food contents may be kept actually at boiling point for a long time.

NATIONALIZING CHILDREN

Out of poor, war-plagued Russia have come two horrible ideas—the Nationalizing of Woman and the Nationalizing of Children. We do not hear that the former has come into actual practice, although it has been openly, not only suggested, but advocated, by statesmen. All that it means in heart-sache and broken ideals is impossible to realize. Even distraught Russia is not yet degraded enough to believe in the sanctity of love and the sacredness of marriage. But—it is doing, what, though less repulsive at first, though, may work in time as great a harm—it is Nationalizing Children. To picture it mentally makes the American mother sick at heart. Half, they tell us, of the boys and girls over three years of age have been gathered into barracks—herded together to be carried for by the state. Here they will live and be reared and know nothing of home life. The strangest, most incomprehensible feature of it all is that "the mothers like it," according to the word of Madam Kolontai who is head of the Department of Child Welfare.

OUT TO AUNT MARY'S

Riley pictures in charming fashion the days when "We went visiting, me and you, Out to Aunt Mary's. The teams we met, and the courtymen; And the long highway, with sunshins' spread As thick as butter on country bread. Our creaks behind, and our heart ahead Out to Old Aunt Mary's."

PRETTY WAR BRIDE SHOT BY HUSBAND

Mrs. Tessie Lotisno, who was an English war bride, brought to Portland by an overseas veteran, Thomas Lotisno, was fatally shot by her husband on the streets of Portland early Tuesday morning. She died in the emergency hospital about a half hour after the shooting. At the very moment when death was glazing the woman's eyes, her husband was placed under arrest at Third and Columbia streets by Patrolman T. B. Rosellina. He was taken to the police station and freely talked of the tragedy. "I don't give a damn if they hang me tomorrow; I did what was right," declared Lotisno. "I was trying to make agood woman of her. "If she had done what I told her to, I wouldn't be here now, and she wouldn't be where she is," Lotisno told a Journal reporter this morning. "I told her to come with me. She refused to do it and I shot her."

The woman was picked up in a dying condition and was barely able to gasp her name and that her address was 420 Hawthorne avenue. She was too weak to give any reason for the attack. "I forced her to accompany me from the restaurant and to get into the taxicab," Lotisno said. "We drove to Fourteenth and Alder streets where we got out. After I had paid the taxi driver I turned and saw my wife running away. I ran after her and when I overtook her threw her on the pavement and shot her. I am wholly to blame. No one else is responsible. "I had warned her to cease her bad tricks and told her what would happen if she did not desist."
