Citizenship Report Cards

The public schools in Long Beach, Cal., call the attention of parents to the fact that book learning is not the primary object of a school training. Report cards this year have two parts, one for grades in the regular subjects such as reading, arithmetic, geography and history, and the other for development in citizenship. The explanation reads:

"This folder contains two reports. The first is of greater importance. It is a record of the progress of your child in the formation of those habits and attitudes that result in the moral and social qualities necessary for the future citizen in a democracy. The home and school must work together in giving this training."

It is a good idea. Education has failed if it has not helped boys and girls, young men and women, to become better citizens, clear-eyed, industrious, thinking citizens, with ideals of service and vision for the future.

When education has failed in the past, it has done so largely because parents and schools have not recognized this main purpose, or because, recognizing it, each has left it to the other to work out. The mere fact of stating the case on the familiar little report card will have the beneficial effect of arousing parents to a realization of these overlooked facts. Working with the schools to help their children in "the formation of those habits and attitudes that result in the moral and social qualities necessary for the future citizen in a democracy" should not only insure satisfactory progress on the part of the children, but a considerable improvement along those very same lines on the part of adults.

Five persons realized that deflation would be so painful.

It is easy to find fault, but it has no real use after you have found it.

Give some persons plenty of time and they will tell a lot more than they know.

Quite a lot of girls take more interest in a hop-fest than they do in a hope chest.

RAID BY IRISH POLICE IN DUBLIN
Tanks and battering rams are used by the police and troops to batter down doors in search for murder suspects in connection with the ambush of constabulary near Dublin.

High Lights in President Harding's Inaugural Address March 4th.

We have seen world passion spend its fury, but we contemplate our republic unshaken and hold our civilization secure.

The recorded progress of our republic proves the wisdom of the inherited policy of non-involvement in the old world affairs.

We are ready to associate ourselves with the nations of the world, great and small, for conference and for counsel.

A world super-government is contrary to everything we cherish and can have no sanction by our republic.

The selfishness of the United States a thing proved, our devotion to peace for ourselves and for the world is well-established.

America is ready to encourage, eager to initiate, anxious to participate in any seemingly programme likely to lessen the probability of war.

We must understand that ties of trade bind nations in closest intimacy and none may receive except as he gives.

We have riveted the gaze of all civilization to the selfishness and unrighteousness of representative democracy.

We hold no national prejudice, we entertain no spirit of revenge, we do not hate, we do not covet, we dream of no conquest.

There is something inherently wrong when one portion of our citizenship turns its activity to private gain amid defensive war, while another is fighting.

Discouraging indebtedness confronts us like all the war-torn nations, and these obligations must be provided for. No civilization can survive repudiation.

We can reduce abnormal expenditures, and we will. We can strike at war taxation, and we must.

Our most dangerous tendency is to expect too much of government and at the same time do for it too little.

There is no instant step from disorder to order. We must face a condition of grave reality, charge off our losses and start afresh.

With the nation-wide induction of womanhood into our political life we may count upon her institutions, her refinement, her intelligence and her influence to revert the social order.

My most fervent prayer for America is for industrial peace, with its rewards widely and generally distributed.

It revolution insists upon overturning established order, let other people make the tragic experiment.

The earth is thirsting for the cup of good will. Understanding is its fountain source.

We seek participation in the world's exchanges because therein lies our way to widened influence and the triumphs of peace.

Ours ought to be a country free from great blotches of distressed poverty.

Where genius has made for great possibilities justice and happiness must be reflected in a greater common welfare.

I would rejoice to acclaim the era of the golden rule and crown it with the autocracy of service.

I pledge an administration wherein all the agencies of government are called to serve and ever promote an understanding of government purely as an expression of the popular will.

MANY MEMORIALS TO MONTCALM, DEFENDER OF QUEBEC

Although Wolfe, who defeated Montcalm, "died victorious" on the Plains of Abraham in 1759, Canada in general and Quebec individually have not failed to honor the vanquished as well as the victor. As a matter of fact, Montcalm, a Frenchman, has more historical ado made about him than Wolfe, the Briton who wrested Quebec and New France—Canada was then called—from the French. In the beautiful Governor's Garden, adjoining the Chateau Frontenac on Dufferin Terrace, is the Wolfe-Montcalm monument in honor of both of these great soldiers.

On St. Louis street, which a century and a half ago was the fashionable promenade of old Quebec, is still to be seen a quaint building which was Montcalm's headquarters. The building, now used as a cigar store, bears an inscription stating this fact. There is also a very striking and artistic statue of Montcalm in Quebec.

Very recently the great French soldier has been further honored by having a big steamship, the "Montcalm," named in his honor. This ship, built for the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services, is 565 feet long and has a gross tonnage of 16,200, twin screws, and geared turbine engines. The Montcalm, and her sister ships, the Montjenny and Matapedia, will be in passenger and freight service between Montreal and Liverpool, passing up and down the broad St. Lawrence which Montcalm loved. The St. Lawrence is a mile wide and is noted for its beautiful scenery. The river played a conspicuous part in Montcalm's undoing, for Wolfe used it to secretly transfer his army from below Quebec to Wolfe's Cove above the city, thereby gaining access to the Plains of Abraham, from which the fortified city was vulnerable to attack.
