Business Determination

The Dodge Idea magazine tells of a certain plant that last October faced a serious business situation. There were very few orders. Many of their competitors had shut down, and this seemed the only sensible

Finally one grey-haired, but keen old fighter in the business management, took the floor to express his views. "We are not going to close down," he said.
"We're going to fight." He told how he had been through financial storms that made the recent flurry seem like a ripple. As a result of his talk, the firm speeded up production, they cut down costs, and they made a big effort to sell their product.

Now that concern is back to a normal basis, while a lot of their competitors are far below their regular output or else are shut down.

A great deal of the business trouble of the past few months, is due to the easy going habits developed during the war and thereafter, when goods sold themselves. In the pre-war days, people had to hustle to get work. They will have to hustle now, but it can be

The problem created by quiet business, is in the case of retail stores, a matter of advertising. Instead of cutting down on publicity, if business is quiet, the expenditure for publicity ought to increase.

The Dry Goods Economist tells how the big city department stores do it. It tells of one of these stores that usually aims to spend 4 per cent of the gross sales of its ready-to-wear department in advertising. in view of trade conditions, it has now put up the percentage of publicity expense above 6 per cent of sales, in two of its most important departments. This is the kind of spirit that wins trade, and it can get it in Oregon
