If we were subject to three masters, we should think ourselves very much oppressed, and we would be, which goes to show that our threefold government is not master, but servant, and we manipulate the wheels within wheels so harmoniously that we are scarcely aware of its triune nature. If we thought we could be better served by a one-form government we could easily make it so; but which two of the three should we eliminate? Suppose we tried to get along with only the National Government? All our affairs would be administered from a remote capital. Imagine San makes the whole body weak and in Francisco or St Augustine unable to erect a school-building, pave a street, or try a chicken-thief without action from Washington, D. C.! Justice would not only be long-delayed, but impogsible ,as those administering affairs at so long range could not know local conditions. The mass of detail would hopelessly clog the wheels of progress. Even should a regime be possible, it would be continual danger of immense corruption. It would not be elastic, adaptible, or responsive to the wishes of individual freemen. No. we must have our smaller and close-at-home governments! We would not have free-
