Taft As Chief Justice

The ups and downs in the career of William H Taft, who now realizes the ambition of his life in becoming chief justice of the United States supreme court, have been of a dramatic character. A man who was beaten for the presidency so badly that he got the electoral vote of only two of the smallest states, might be considered to be the head of the Down and Out club.

Yet, somehow he managed to win an office which is as important as the presidency itself. And he got it with very little opposition. The good nature with which Mr. Taft took his smashing defeat was one element in his success. Many statesmen nurse their hurts in public. When they get turned down they make sulky and bitter comments, that indicate that in their opinion the people who threw them out are fools.

The good natured way in which Mr. Taft took his overturn shows that he respects the verdict of the people and went far to conciliate many who opposed his reelection in 1912.

Probably what has won more support for Mr. Taft than anything else, has been the feeling that he is fair minded. The people are sick of the bitterness of people who take extreme views, and are strongly committed to one side or another of economic questions. They want a man of judicial temperment, who can look all around existing controversies and see the merits of each line of argument.

In the disputes between labor and capital, which are the most difficult problem of our times, they want a man who warmly sympathizes with the aspiations of labor, and yet they want one who is sympathetic enough with business so that he will not go off half-cocked in favor of visionary ideas. Even the people who do not agree with Mr. Taft politically, think that he has that judicial attitude, and this feeling has smoothed his way to the head of the high court.

Wagy was appointed by the county bent. The State Board of Health says court June 30, to take office July 1 that the man who has held the office t a salary of $1700 per year. is still retaining his position, and cites the law on the case.

But the sheriff's office refused to emove C. J. Long, the present inumbent and refused to appoint Wagy. According to the law, under the proisions of section 3634 of the 1920 Oregon code, the appointment of deputies is in the hands of the chief of any office, the county court having the authority to fix the salary and to determine the number of deputies The county budget provides for a fund for the payment of the traf tic officer. Under the appointment of the sheriff, Long still holds the position. The court order names Wagy to receive the salary. This latter man however, is not an officer, due to the fact that he has not been deputized by the sheriff's office, and he has therefore, no more power to make ATTACKED arrests than an ordinary citizen. Whether the county intends to em oloy two officers, will hinge upon whether or not funds for their pay ment are available, but according to the budget, provision is made only ACTION BY SUPREME for the payment of one man. Legal opinions have been given to the effect that the appointment or removal of a deputy is completely in the hands of the sheriff, to whom Portland Dealers Adverse to the deputy is responsible Who will get paid for the work of the position will not be determined, under the present status of affairs, until the warrant for the monthly pay of $166.66 s made out by the county clerk, either under the specifications of the budget, a special court order, or a legal opinion from the district attorney. In the meantime the county has a leputized traffic officer without any salary, and a traffic officer under salary who has n opower to make ar- elect a secretary who shall be in Judge H. E. Cross, when asked regarding the matter, made the simple statement that Hempstead held the office, and referred his inquisitor to the journal of the court proceedings. which, under date of June 21, 1921, contains the order of the court appointing Hempstead.

The judge formerly stated that the appointment of Hempstead was made been parked on both sides of the as a matter of economy, to combine streets, making it almost impossible the offices of county health officr and to see an approaching car unless care county physician. This latter position was occupied by the late Dr. J. W. Norris. Hempstead now holds this position. He was appointed by the court at a combined salary of $1800 a year, the total amount of the two salaries which are $750 for the county physician and $1050 for the county health officer.

Dr. Welsh states that he has received no notice of charges being filed against him, and no mention in the telegram from the secretary of the State Board of Health is made of any such charges being filed. Under the provisons of the law he then still remains in office.

G. F. Anderson, the owner, was at the Chautauqua at the time of the blaze, and had taken his car, which is usually stored in the barn. The origin of the blaze is not known but due to the ract that hobos have been occasionally found in the barn, it is believed that the fire was started from a cigarette or match thrown away before being extinguished.
