> SERIOUS ASPECT OF MARKETING SYSTEM IS SEEN BY SPENCE

> Master of State Grange Says Revolution Possible Solution.

The serious aspect of marketing systems, as they affect the modern farmer, is discussed by C. E. Spence, of Reaver Creek, master of the State Grange, in his annual report to the grangel After a discussion of Icooperative marketing, Mr. Spence says: "If co-operatve effort fails, if the combined interests against them are too strong and succeed in defeating the co-operative effort, there will be, in my judgment. three possibilities facing the farmer of America:

"First-Peonage or neasantly of the middle ages.

"Second-Political action, and state ownership and operation of the system of distribution.

"Third-Revolution.

"I do not believe that the American farmer will ever stand to be reduced to peasantry, although there is a movement on foot, under direction of the federal department of agriculture to colonize European peasants on farms in this country. There is no legitimate demand for such action, as there is no shortage of farm products in this country. As stated before, our farm products are going to waste for
