RISE IN PRICE Of Raw Materials And Some Staples

RESULTS FROM Apathy of Buyers; Dealers Now Face SLACK DEMAND

By Robert E. Smith

President, Lumbermen's Trust Company Bank, Portland, Ore.

Most lines of business are showing a lower demand, caused probably by a slight advance in the prices of certain commodities. It is an interesting fact that people are looking for lower prices, and as soon as any price is advanced, a buyers' strike ensues. This movement seems to be psychological and general, and if it continues it will do much to lessen the spread between the cost of raw materials and retail prices of which so many complain. People are now buying staples, not luxuries. The prices of some commodities which dropped hardest are reacting to some extent, but it is the general belief of dealers that this reaction is temporary and that gradually prices will begin to decline again.

A leading lumber manufacturer told me that the expected demand for lumber has not yet materialized and that a feeling of gloom pervades a large part of the industry. It is his opinion, however, that the slackening of demand is due largely to the severe weather which the whole country has been experiencing and which has put a stop to building. This manufacturer thinks that the consumers are holding off in the hope that there will be further reductions in the prices of lumber, but he does not think reductions possible without further curtailments of wages which is probably impossible at this time as wages in camps and mills have already been sharply reduced.

Lumber Moves Slowly

In spite of the publicity which has been given to the supposed large purchases of lumber by railroad companies, the real truth is that these probably have not been very great and have not relieved the situation to any appreciable degree. Oriental business is very slack and in the opinion of a number of local lumbermen, Japan and other Oriental nations all overhauled last fall and will not be in the market for any more
