NEWBERG DECISION PUTS LICENSE LAWS IN DOUBT

A decision which will probably effect the application of the so-called interurban franchise law at present operative in Oregon City has been rendered in the Newberg courts.

The city of Newberg passed an ordinance requiring all auto passenger carriers to pay a license for the privilege of using the streets and for maintaining a terminus in Newberg. This hearing will mark the final legal action in the circuit court to decide whether or not the proposed city hall can be built in McLoughlin park, Officially, the case is known as that of Mary Morris and Mary Caufield against Oregon City. Under agreement between the opposing attorneys the hearing will be without a jury and no matters of fact will be contested. The litigation is based wholly upon legal grounds and the application of the laws governing the use to which land donated for public park purposes can be put.

The suit was brought August 6 1921 to restrain the city from the construction of the municipal building in McLoughlin park. The location had been picked after a lengthy contest which culminated in the placing of a measure on the ballot to determine the sentiment of the people as to a ONE DIVORCE GRANTED; hill or down-town location.

A $30,000 bond issue for the construction of the building is at present unsold and action is awaiting the definite outcome of the present case.
