Exports Increase In Farm Implements

Exports of agricultural implements and tractors for the first month of 1922 show an increase of $314,208 over the month of December, 1921, says a special report by the Agricultural Implements Division of the Department of Commerce. Compared with January, 1921, however, there is a very decided drop—from $7,329,277 in that month to $1,011,435 in January of this year. There is reason for encouragement in the fact that the statistics for January indicate an upward trend of exports. The exports for January, 1921, were not equaled during any other month of that year and steadily declined in succeeding months, reaching their lowest mark in the last month of the year, when the exports of implements were valued at $697,237. The chief decrease in January, 1922, as compared with January, 1921, was in plows and cultivators, and mowers and reapers.

RANCHER AT ESTACADA USING NOVEL METHODS

John S. Osborne, of Estacada is credited with attracting considerable attention in his district with a new method of raising loganberries. This innovator is known as the Osborne system, deriving its name from the originator.

The advantages claimed are ease of training up and pruning out old canes, saving in wire and shading of berries so that there is little loss from heat or drying up. About the same bearing surface is claimed for this practice due to the growth of side laterals.

Another industry at Estacada in which Mr. Osborne is interested is a colony devoted to the raising of ginseng. According to Webster, this mystical Chinese product is an aromatic root chiefly valued for its medicinal properties and almost the total crop raised in the United States is exported to China. Roots are grown under the shade of a lath house and are said to sell for from $5 to $9 a pound.

Associated with Osborne in the ginseng venture are Henry Trapp, W. R. Woodworth, T. J. Reygon. Five years are reported as the normal period elapsing before the crop is ready for harvest and rumor has it that the ginseng growers will soon rank among the wealthiest of our citizens.
