NEW EQUIPMENT IS INSTALLED IN LOCAL TELEPHONE STATION

The importance of the telephone in our business and social relations makes its use so much an accepted fact that few realize how short a time has elapsed since its earliest history and how recent has been its development from a small beginning until today it has become one of the city's largest industries.

The first telephone exchange in Oregon City was established in 1893 by the Oregon Telephone and Telegraph Company to connect local business people to the toll line which had previously been built between this city and Portland.

Construction of this toll line was one of the first developments of the telephone industry in this state, as it was built in 1879 along the west bank of the Willamette river by the Oregon and California Railway Company.

Shortly after its completion it was taken over by the Oregon Telephone Company and as its use increased, it was necessary to establish a local exchange to bring the service to the users' place of business.

At this period of development the telephone was classed as a luxury and local calls were few in number, in fact the total number of subscribers in 1896 was but thirty-three. During the following year, however, the demand for service began to increase and it was found the first switchboard had been outgrown.

The office was then moved to a new locality and a switchboard with one hundred lines installed.

Development is Marked— Another stage of development was reached in 1905 when the open wires on the principal streets were replaced with aerial cable. In 1906 the central office was again moved, this time to its present location and common battery equipment was installed, including a complete No. 9 switchboard with five positions, the installation being completed early in 1907.

During that year the growth was very rapid and before its end the orders for new farmer lines had so greatly increased that central office equipment for twenty additional lines were needed. In 1909 another section of switchboard was placed in service, aerial cable was strung to Gladstone and plant facilities with which to furnish telephone service at that town. The year 1910 saw service extended south to Canemah and a one-hundred-pair cable strung across the river to West Linn.

The development since that time has been gradual until recently when it was found necessary to again increase the central office facilities by installing two toll switchboard positions, one rural switchboard section and facilities for taking care of one hundred additional subscribers' lines.

There was also installed in 1911 a new modern ring equipment. In 1906 a competing exchange was established which continued in operation until 1919 when it was absorbed by The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company and the old competing plant dismantled.

The consolidation of the two systems was brought about principally by the economic principle, which makes of the telephone a natural monopoly.

Service is Praised— Oregon City's present day telephone service is well cared for by a force of courteous, conscientious employees who have indicated their loyalty to their company and their faith in its management by subscribing for 68 shares of American Telephone and Telegraph Company stock.

The Pacific Company provides its employees the privilege of buying this capital stock at a favorable price on an installment basis of payment and that it results beneficially to those availing themselves of it is evidenced by the thrifty results in the Oregon City office. The savings of the employees as represented by the present market value of these 68 shares of stock is more than $816.00.

It now requires a total of twenty-two employees to operate the local office, whose efforts represent a monthly payroll of approximately $2500.00. Of these, sixteen are operators, young ladies who come from Oregon City homes and are a part of the city's social and business life. These operators are serving the city's telephone users twenty four hours every day of the year, working in shifts of eight hours each and handling an average of 7000 local calls and between 1100 and 1200 incoming and outgoing long distance calls daily, with a degree of accuracy and dispatch that is almost unbelievable.

1535 Patrons Served— These calls originate or terminate at the 1535 telephone stations now served from the Oregon City exchange, stations representing a development and growth that has kept pace with the city's growth and business activities until today the telephone has become a public necessity, not alone in the office, the store and the manufacturing plant but also in the home, on the farm, in fact everywhere that men gather for business or social intercourse. The present local development has been actuated by a faith not only in the telephone and its physical possibilities but in the integrity and future of Oregon City.

The Pacific Company has a present investment of $130,000.00 in its equipment and plant required to furnish telephone service to this city and must keep adding to this investment that it's plant and equipment may always be just in advance of the city's progress. Already this year over $2500.00 has been spent for this purpose. Were Oregon City's business at a standstill, were there no visible future for the city, the present telephone plant would need no additions. The development of ten years ago would now be sufficient. But the Telephone Company believes in our future and has tangibly expressed that belief in its buildin program and improvements outlined for their local exchange both in the past, a realized belief, and for the future.

Time To Spray

Losses through controllable pests reach millions of dollars yearly

A fraction of this amount would buy enough spray to wipe out the entire loss. Sherwin-Williams make a complete line of insecticides in dry powder form to control Scale, Fungus and Insect pests. Sherwin-Williams insecticides do not deteriorate, there are no water-costs or losses through leaks and freezing. They are bought in tremendous tonnage throughout the country and are constantly re-ordered in larger quantities.

S-W Dry Powdered Arsenate of Lead is the standard of power and safety throughout the country. It contains 30% to 33% arsenic oxide and less than 1/3 of one per cent water soluble arsenic. These proportions give maximum poisoning power and killing strength, but make this brand so safe from burning that it can be used freely and thoroughly without risk to tender foliage or fruit. The systematic use of S-W Dry Powdered Arsenate of Lead will make vigorous trees, increase yield, improve grade and materially help to command the highest market prices on all produce from orchards and gardens.

Price of Arsenate of Lead is so reasonable no one can afford to neglect spraying.
