"THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER."

Big Comic Opera Success at Heilig Theatre All Next Week. "The Chocolate Soldier," in which Frederic C. Whitney the veteran impressario, is sending the Whitney Opera Company to the Hellig Theater, Portland, for 7 nights beginning Sun day, January 15, with a special price matinee Wednesday and regular matinee Saturday is announced by all advance reports as providing a brilliant full three hours for the theatregoer. Founded on George Bernard Shaw's wittiest play, "Arms and the Man," Stanislaus Stange has provided an English version of the German adaptation by Rudolph Bernauer and Leopold Jacobson that has been uniquely successful in catching the spirit of Shavian humor and in providing a libretto of real human naturalness. In "The Chocolate Soldier" the story begins its unfolding with the rising curtain; climbing in through her balcony window the pursued soldier pleads of Nadina that he may be safely hidden in her boudoir from the enemy even though the soldiers may be commanded by Nadina's flance. Cajoling, teasing and taunting by turns he fascinates Nadina, her mother and cousin to the point of quarrel as to which shall become his benefactor, and each gives him her photograph as he steals away disguised in the husband and father's coat.

When he returns at the close of hattle to return the borrowed coat his boasting over the easy conquest of the three women leads to a frantic intrigue to recover the photographs which grows into one of the most complete comedy scenes of the modern stage.

The cast is a brilliant one. toinette Kopetzky from the Theater National at Prague, Bohemia, singa the fascinating prima donna role. It was she to whom Chicago rose in acclaim for a new-found light opera singer who could really act. Ilon Bergere, a Hungarian grand opera singer, sings the role of the coquettish Mascha; Margaret Crawford that of the deeptoned Aurelia; John R. Phillips, one of the best known light opera baritones, that of the chocolate-eating soldier lover; Harry Dayles, the pompous Alexfus, and Frank H. Beicher and Edmond Mulcahy in the bouffe roles sung by them in the New York and Chicago engagements.

The great singing chorus and the famous Whitney Opera Comique Orchestra are features that will appeal attractively to the music lover. Seats are now selling at theatre for the entire engagement
