A Commonplace Occurrence It Changed the Course of Two Loven By HUDSON C. EASTON Copyright by American Press Asso-ciation, 1911. m

Walking on an avenue in Washington I met a lady whose appearance attracted me. She suddenly stopped. looked down and blusbed to the roots of her hair. Her skirt had become unloosened at the waist. "Can 4 do anything for you?"

asked.

She looked wildly about her for a plan and finally caught one .. "Have you a pin or a bit of string in your pocket?" she asked.

I went through every pocket and at last found a piece of corn colored ribbon that had bound together a package of cigars. I handed it to her with an expression which asked the question, Will that do?"

She selzed it. at the same time thanking me with a nod which plainly meant, "Proceed on your way."

If I had not happened to have that piece of cheap ribbon in my pocket, if that lady's skirt had not become ened at the exact moment 1 ed her. I would now be surrounded by an entirely different environ-

While I was sufficiently impressed with the young lady's appearance-her face was one that I would not easily forget-the incident soon passed out of my mind. Several months passed. One day I made a business trip to Philadelphia and on my return was sitting in a train waiting for it to move out of the station. Hurrying along outside was the girl I had assisted in her difficulty, and on her corsage was a bit of corn colored ribbon tied in a bowknot. At that moment the train began to roll and the next morning appeared among slowly on its wheels.

Two conflicting emotions stirred me dirst, I inferred that the girl in meetnet her fate and was

"Calkins," I said Bercely. "you will remember in what paper and when you saw that ad, or die."

"Then my doom is sealed." laughed Calkins, "for I can remember neither." Could there be anything more tantalizing-a lovely woman trying to find me, I trying to find her, and all our efforts averted?

"Oh, why have I not read all the personals," I cried, "in all the papers every day?" "Because you couldn't have done anything else," replied Calkins, "and, not having time to make a living, you would have starved to death." "Can't you suggest something?"

"Yes; forget all about it. A woman who would advertise like that is probably an adventuress anyway." "If you say that again I'll strangle you." "Truth crushed in the throat would rise again." "She is pure as an angel. Come, old man, tell me some way to find her." "I give it up." Several weeks passed in misery for me, when in a Philadelphia newspaper I read of the trial of a Miss Octavia Merton which was soon to come off in that city. She was accused of having stolen some valuable gems' while one of a house party at a lady's country sent. What was my astonishment to see in a description of Miss Merton the following words:

In her corsage she wears a bow of orange or corn colored ribbon.

I sprang to my feet. I had found my love. But, alas, Calkins was right. She was an adventuress. Her personal, taken together with this charge, was conclusive proof of this. And yet the item said that she was a member of the house party. This indicated that if she were a thief she must be a lady, and a lady of the upper classes would not be likely to advertise for the address of a man she had met on the street I hurriedly wrote a note to an at-torney in Philadelphia whom I knew, asking him to keep me posted as to the coming off of the trial in which I was so deeply interested. In reply I received a telegram stating that it was down on the calendar for the next day. I went to Philadelphia that night the spectators in a back seat where would not be observed. When the accused was led into court I recognized her at once for the girl I had been seeking. She was very pale and appeared to have suffered much. I could not see if she wore the ribbon, for an outside coat was buttoned over ber chest.

I listened eagerly to a statement of the case made by the prosecuting attorney. The girl was a member of a house party; the jewels were missed. and she afterward wore one of them that the owner claimed was hers. Miss Merton's counsel claimed that it had for years been his client's property. He also said that on the day the jewels were stolen she had taken a flying trip to Washington, but since her object in going there was secret she had kept, a knowledge of her trip from every one who knew her. "Were it not for this secrecy, your honor." concluded the attorney. "we could easily have proved an alibi."

Jumping from my seat. I hurried down to the rail, called for the attorney and in an undertone gave him the points of my meeting with the cused in Washington. He at ouce wearing the ribbon so that if we should cross each other's path again J called it as the day of an important would recognize her; second, it was sible for me to learn anything about where she might be found. I didn't know whether or no she lived in Philadelphia where I saw her for the second time, whether she lived in Washington or some different locality from either. Why had I not left the train and rushed after her? Because I had but a few seconds to decide the matter, and in that brief space of time my mind was chiefly occupied with asons why I should not do that very thing. My business required that 1 should reach home on that train. If got out and followed the girl quite likely I would lose her in the crowd

A new element had entered into my being. A girl had failen in love with me, so I believed, at first sight, and was wearing a token by which I might recognize her. Probably she lived in the United States, in which at that time there were more than 70,000,000 people. I had no other information concerning her except that she was wearing a bit of ribbon that had held together a package of cigars. Was not this quite enough to awaken in me a strong desire to find her? The romance of love is fed by the imagination. I lived, as it were, in air castles. The girl wearing my ribbon was the princess that the prince was hunting all over the world and to whom he was at last led by the fairy. True. my first meeting with my princess was especially unromantic. Nevertheless l wished that some kind fairy would conduct me to her.

One day I told my friend Calking about my adventure. He listened to me with great interest till I had finished. then exclaimed:

"So you're the man that was wanted by 'Corn Colored Ribbon!' "What do you mean?"

evident from a blush. "Some months ago-I don't know how long-1 was reading the personals in the beginning of this story with rein a newspaper and came across on signed 'Corn Colored Ribbon.'"

Who? What? When? Where?" exclaimed excitedly.

"Which one of those unintelligable questions do you wish me to answer treasury department in Washington. first?" asked Calkins. Now I am that lady's hushand and the "All of them."

"I remember nothing but that a lady who had met with an accident advertised for the address of a gentleman who had assisted her, and the address was signed as I have told you."

Small Girls Like Palamas.

Mothers of small girls are finding out that their little daughters prefer for their night apparel pajamas like those worn by the boys rather than the more usual lingerie garments.

The just before bedtime romp, the hour of all hours beloved by the young folk, is "lots more fun," said a small girl recently, "if you're not bothered with flappy skirts."

The pajamas for girls are cut exactly like those which brother wears, but the materials are dalutier in coloring and often in weave.

Attractive Bibs. The expression "in fresh bib and tucker" will take on new significance if the mother adopts a novel idea recently seen. The ordinary child's bib is extended to the waist line, where it is cut into a belt to fasten around the waist. This shape is neat, and it stays in place. It may be made very attractive when embroidered in white with buttonholed slits, through which a ribbon may be run to tie at the back

Novel Dress For Girl.

A novel adaptation of the kimono sleeve effect is shown for the dress of a little girl. The side body and the sleeve of elbow length are cut in one piece, which has a lap extending from the front of the shoulder to the bust line, the lap buttoning over upon the double box plait, which extends down to the hem of the dress skirt. Simple, yet chic, is this little frock, a pattern of which is given in one of the current megazines.
