

It Wouldn't Pay to Advertise
A Poor Article

Nor a proposition of doubtful merit or honesty—for ad-readers, nowadays, are DISCRIMINATING. They know values—they know GENUINE things, genuine opportunities.

Any article which can be sold by advertising is, by that test, a GOOD article. YOU are safe in buying a thing which has "stood the fire of publicity."

The maker of a widely advertised article, or commodity, is always on trial for his business life. He cannot shirk, nor cheapen his product—and this is the best possible protection for the consumer.

You are SAFE in buying advertised things—it's the logic of nowadays business conditions.

Heart to Heart
Talks.

By EDWIN A. NYE

DISCOVERY OF A SOUL.

Owen Kildare is dead. And who was he—Owen Kildare? First he was a waif of the New York streets who slept in barrels in the back alleys. Sometimes he sold newspapers or blacked shoes.

He grew up a Bostony tough who fought bloody prizefights and served as "bouncer" for low dives. At the age of thirty years he could neither read nor write.

And then one day a woman found his soul. A gang of his brother toughs annoyed a mere slip of a girl, schoolteacher and city missionary, who was compelled to pass by some of their resorts.

Whereat a chivalric impulse flamed up in Kildare. He fought the crowd away, rescued the girl and escorted her to her boarding place. And the girl, Marnie Rose, saved this man from himself.

She patiently taught him to read and write, caused him to give up his prize-fighting and to enter honest employment. And he persuaded her to become his wife.

Within a week of the wedding day his promised girl wife died. And that almost killed Kildare's soul. He went back to his vicious life. But he could not forget.

One day a newspaper offered a prize for the best love story. Owen Kildare seized some brown wrapping paper and wrote his own wonderful and sad love story—the first draft of his later book, "My Marnie Rose."

He won the prize. That was another turning point. He wrote for the newspapers and magazines, wrote several books and made a name for himself.

"My Marnie Rose," his first book, is one of the most stirring and vital tales of American life. The book was dramatized under the name of "The Regeneration," but for some reason failed to make a hit.

From the time of that failure was dated his mental decline. And a few weeks ago he died in an insane asylum in New York.

Had the seeds of physical and mental decay been sown in his former days of dissipation? Perhaps. But the story of the rise of Owen Kildare and his progress from wife begginings—the story of a soul discovered by a woman—will always be worth while.

NEW YORK, April 10.—Fifty girl students at Barnard College are quarantined in Brooks Hall, one of the dormitories, because of a case of scarlet fever discovered there.

Charge Made Against Wife By J. M. Bradley, Seeking Divorce.

J. M. Bradley has filed a suit for divorce against Mary Bradley. They were married at Montezano, Wash., and Bradley charges his wife with using vulgar and profane language and says she drank with men associates at Portland. On November 10, 1909, at the Wilburn rooming house, on Union avenue and Washington street, his wife, with another woman and two men, was ordered out of the place by two police officers, and she returned home at 1:30 a. m. the following night, after a carousal. Attorney George C. Brownell appears for Bradley.

Council Not Entirely to Blame. Editor Enterprise: I see you print a communication from "Recall" on "Polly in Street Building" in a recent issue. Don't you know that what "Recall" advocates is just what they did in Oregon City some years ago?

An engineer was engaged to lay out the streets and alleys in the city and establish the grades—and he did a good job. But "Let well enough alone" had few advocates in Council and if was not many moons until the members were changing things here and there over the city until you could not tell where you were at, or whether they were any place at all or not.

The lay out made by the original surveyor—who laid the town out with a view to a few streets made for utility and the others to conform with the typography of the country—did not suit some certain man who had "influence" and he at once sought for a change to suit his fancy. This granted by Council it was a short step from that to a change to suit some one else and then things went from bad to worse until there was no system at all that played any part whatever in the street building game then practiced.

Finally Council awoke to the fact that it had permitted itself to be drawn into a scheme of changing that was certain sooner or later to spoil the whole town. At this it tried to back up and has been backing most of the time since that date, and naturally it has got no place under such tactics.

And there is no one to whom you can take the blame. With the present system of choosing Council because of vote-getting powers and with no reference to ability, and when a man has been in long enough so that he begins to understand what should be done in turning him out and replacing him with a new member having no experience, little can be expected. A man who is conscientious needs a term or so to understand what ought to be done, and when he knows that a green man is picked for his place, naturally he must depend on some one else for his knowledge and it is a rare avist who will not make a foolish flight of it on more than one occasion.

I believe that the present Council is composed of conscientious men, and that they want to do what is right. But look at the precedents that have been established in the past, and at the changes that each one calls for—from two to three each in order to in a measure correct the very evil that the change itself wrought. And this Council has naturally inherited many jobs done and many changes that are causing present trouble and what this Council must do is to so fix things up that the least possible damage may come from the errors of previous ones. And in some cases the previous Councils were but trying to fix up the errors of their predecessors and so on ad infinitum.

If you would get the original plat made some twenty years ago, and study it carefully, I think you would agree with me that do what is right, the stakes for the streets and alleys at that time did the work about as well as it could possibly be done, and that had the work gone on in conformity with those figures there would be less trouble now and a more perfect system of streets and alleys the city over.
