SLOW GETTING TO WORK.

Congress doesn't seem to be getting down to business very fast since it was called into extra session. There seems to be too much reorganizing made necessary, and that the Democrats, who have recently come into power, hardly know which end to take hold of.

Why should there be all this preparation? Why is not the business of the country so conducted that it will matter not which party is in power as regards business? That is the way the business should be conducted, and no mistake.

There is no doubt that the Democrats are weeding out certain fat jobs that should have been abolished years ago, but that ought not delay business to any great extent and the change from one party to the other should be but a matter of a day.

STREET COMMITTEE CANVASES SITUATION

LOOKS OVER GROUND SPANNED BY S. P. BRIDGE AND NOTES COMPANY'S DESIRES.

The street committee of Council made the rounds of Washington, Twelfth, Eleventh, Sixth, Center and other streets under course of improvement Tuesday to see the condition of the streets and about how far the improvements have progressed.

The Southern Pacific doesn't want to build a stable structure at that point at this time. The railway people are planning great improvements through Oregon City and Parkplace, and in fact all along the line from Portland to a point some distance south of the city.
