Heart to Heart Talks.

DIVINE DISCONTENT.

Yesterday I beard a sermon against I have written of the blessings of contentment, and I'hm not desirous to take any of it back. But-There is a discontent that is differ-

It is the discontest that is satisfied only with the lest, a wholesome longing for that which is excellent.

If the almighty power that sprinkled space with the stars land been content with anything less than earth there had been but clouds and darkness

If primitive man had been content with his crude stone ax there had been no rivilization, science, literature, art. If Newton had been content to see the apple fall without knowing why the law of gravity might yet be undiscovered.

If Lincoln had been content with his Salem grocery store the history of Illinois and of the nation would be differ-

There is a divine discontent. It must be so, because man is built that way. Man is finer, more sensitive, than his environment, and friction with the rougher elements burts him.

He is greater than his destiny, He is larger than his body and cannot be kept within it. He is bigger than his grave and revolts at it.

He is discontented when that which highest and best in him is assaulted. He is wounded when injustice is done his fellows. He wants to right ngs. He wants to beip conditions.

Therefore his discontent. Therefore the godlikeness of his disentent-the discontent that wants to better and be better. On the one hand-

There is a discontent that is far from divine, the discontent that vents itself in faultfinding and in fretfulness rather than in righteons desire

The divine impulse of discontent that has for its guidance the right and clear intent-why, that discontent has changed this earth from merely dirt to half a paradise, changed man from a scowling brute to half an angel.

BRYAN SEEKS PLACE

AS HE WAS THE "GOAT" THREE TIMES HE WANTS THE PRES-ENT. OPPORTUNITY.

WASHINGTON, April 12-(Special.)—It is the general belief that Wm. Jennings Bryan wants the nomination for President on the Demo-cratic ticket in 1912, and that he feels that he ought to have it. And it is generally believed that he feels that he can come nearer being elected than any other Democrat. And the truth is that Bryan can point to the fact that Parker made a poorer showing

Now things are considered different; there is a fair prospect now and as Bryan has been the "goat" three times, two of which at least he had no show. thinks it is only fair to give him a chance. And it is probably only fair to admit that Bryan has the confidence of a larger number of conservative men now than ever before.

He received 78 votes just enough to elect, against 26 for Supreme Court Justice Horace Demer his Republican opponent.

Roosevelt endorses the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people; and by Statement No. 1 until that is secured. The assembly and the old guard fought this, and when he tells them to be good and take their medicine, they gulp and frown and growl-but they take it.
