OREGON CITY GIRL WRITES OF MAY DAY

MISS RUTH LATOURETTE DESCRIBES FESTIVAL AT McMINNVILLE COLLEGE.

Miss Ruth Latourette, daughter of Mrs. D. C. Latourette, a senior at McMinville College, wrote the following interesting description of May Day Festival at the college:

"On Tuesday morning we awoke to find a cloudy sky and a fine mist dampening to clothes and to spirits alike. But preparations had gone too far to be dropped then, so we went ahead trying to imagine the sun would shine soon.

"About ten o'clock the auto parade began. There were about eleven autos altogether, and they were decorated very prettily. The queen and her maids of honor had a special car, then the archbishop, herald and guards were in another. The Maypole dancers in two more. The queen's maids in another, and besides these 'each sorority and fraternity and the literary societies had one which they decorated. The D. D.'s was decorated in green, in a most fantastic manner. The Adelpheis in blue and white, the Agora (the literary society) in apple blossoms and bunting. The Tomani was decorated in Indian style, and several of the girls in Indian costume rode in it. I can't remember how the L. L. auto looked. Our Kappa car was trimmed with yellow and white bunting and pennants, and several of our girls in Greek costume rode in it.

"The parade came up back of the college and the royal party went inside. Then, after due deliberation it came down the college steps and around the campus by the 'gym.' The herald came first, preceding the queen with long 'hear the approach of the queen.' Then came the two guards in military costume, followed by the stately archbishop—Prof. Boughton—in long flowing black and white robes, with a high pontifical head-dress and a glittering cross in his hand. The queen's maid of honor, two little girls carrying the crown, a sister of the queen herself in all her splendor followed by her four maids and two jesters made up the procession. I forgot to say that the May pole dancers came first—twelve boys and twelve girls—carrying ivy chains on their shoulders. These marched first in two lines to the throne beneath the old oak, and knelt with their chains on their shoulders, until the royal party passed between them up the steps of the platform.

"On the platform in front of the throne the queen and her court stood in solemn array, while the archbishop in a long funny speech, at the end of which he made the queen swear by her well-used Latin grammar, that she would cherish and protect her kingdom throughout her reign, crowned her majesty Elva I. Queen of May. (This sentence is so long it reminds me of that one in the first book of Caesar, Chap. 14.) Then the herald arose and read the queen's proclamation, a long speech proclaiming a holiday, commanding all her loyal subjects to cease from studying and throw off the galling yoke of the faculty, and devote themselves to jollification and sports. Then the orchestra played and we had time to look around us and take in all the sights. It was really very pretty—the old oak with its leaves just beginning to come out, spreading its branches over the queen and the court; the maids all in white, the queen herself a very pretty girl and becomingly dressed, the two guards carrying their swords, standing in front and to the side of the queen, stiff as ramrods; the jesters in their crazy costumes, the two little crown bearers, and then below the spectators happy crowd, all around the green grass, the budding trees and all the spots dear to the heart of every 'Mae' student. But presently our thoughts were broken into by the appearance of the May pole dancers who marched out in front of the queen (where the May pole was stationed) and gave a fancy drill before winding the pole. They were wearing purple scarfs in this dance, which was exceedingly pretty. They wound the pole twice, in a different way each time. I wish you could have seen it. After this we Kappa girls sang Mendelssohn's 'Spring Song,' harmonized in four parts for girls' voices.

"This ended the ceremonies for the morning. Then, as at ten o'clock, between some McMinnville players as P. U.'s men had failed to put in an appearance. It was dinner time at this stage of the game, so we Kappa girls hied us away to the Music Hall where we had a lunch as we did last year, you remember. Had it been dry we should have had it outside, but everything was too wet. After a good dinner, we hurried out to the athletic field for the base ball game, with Columbia University. Oh, that game! I can feel the excited shivers go up and down my spine now, whenever I think of it. During the first five innings Columbia made five and we didn't get a thing. Our boys seemed to go all to pieces. Then they got up their nerve and made three. We began to take courage and yelled like mad. There was a student in front of us who waved his fist so madly in the air at each good play for Mae that he almost invariably made a dent in his derby hat, and after each aspm had to take it off and press it into shape. In the seventh or eighth inning our boys got in some fine playing and two more came in almost at once. There had been another in before this so the score was 5 to 6 when these two runs were made. As the last one came in the crowd went mad. They stood up in the grandstand and yelled and screamed, the boys on the field nearly turning somersaults; the foremost student kicked and waved his hands wildly; and made a perfectly immense dent in his cherished derby, and all this time a Columbia seider was searching frantically for the base, and our man was running his legs off to get home. He made it just a second ahead of the ball and the crowd breathed a sigh of relief. After that neither side made a thing, and the game was over. This victory was especially welcome, as Columbia has a fine team and we expected to lose. With this ball game all the festivities, excepting a conservatory recital, were over. This came in the evening and was very fine. The day ended without rain, and the sun had even designed to show his face a few times."

MUCH of the taste and pleasure in eating good food depends on the sugar and syrups used.

Think of the finished delight given to your morning meal when the syrup used with your cakes is pleasing to your taste. Note that deliciousness when you drink well-made coffee with the right kind of sugar in it. Small matters—yes—but it is just those small matters that make life a complete success or a round of annoyances. We have studied the question—we pride ourselves on our attention to details of the kind. Come in and ask us.
