

The Passion Play

The following is from an editorial in the Oregonian April 16th 1911

2 DAYS

Sunday and Monday

May 14 and 15

Afternoon and Evening

Oberammergau and its Passion Play perennially fascinate the attention of the world. Every ten years when the religious drama is re-enacted by the Bavarian peasants increasing multitudes flock to see it. Some of them go because they are curious to witness a performance which is praised by the entire civilized world. Others fall naturally into the current of fashion. They visit Oberammergau, as they do Baireuth, because it is the proper thing to do. Others obtain deep religious satisfaction from the spectacle of the persecution and sufferings of the Savior. The Passion Play is to them a sacred ceremony and they attend it with the same feelings of devotion which animate the villagers who perform its various parts. Dozens of books have been written on the Passion Play. It has made the fortune of a score of popular lecturers. Nothing is more profitable at a church show than views of the Oberammergau peasants performing their parts on the primitive stage which has been erected to accommodate the play since the use of the village churchyard was forbidden.

Ordinance No. —
An ordinance providing for the construction of a Steel Bridge on concrete foundation, across Abernathy Creek on the right of way of Portland Railway Light & Power Company and a northerly extension of Main Street, Oregon City, Oregon, and the appropriation of $2000.00 by Oregon City to pay part of the cost of said bridge.

Oregon City does ordain as follows:

Section 1. It is hereby provided that the Portland Railway, Light and Power Company shall construct across Abernathy Creek on its right of way and a northerly extension of Main Street in Oregon City, Oregon, a steel bridge on concrete foundation, said bridge shall consist of a 50 foot center deck span and three 14 foot spans at each end, all to be constructed of steel, including columns, trusses, girders, stringers and side walk bracket supports with wooden deck floor and sidewalk stringers. The driveway between curbs or guard rails shall be 22 feet in width and sidewalks shall be 6 feet in width with timber railings.

Section 2. The Portland Railway, Light and Power Company shall maintain foundation steel structure and wooden cross beams during the life of said bridge and Oregon City shall maintain the wooden sidewalks and the wooden stringers under the same and the wooden deck of the bridge with the exception of the wooden cross ties heretofore mentioned.

Section 3. There is hereby appropriated out of the general fund of Oregon City, Oregon, $2000.00 to be drawn in favor of and paid to the said Portland Railway, Light and Power Company towards the construction of said bridge upon the completion of said bridge and approval thereof by the Committee on Streets and Public Property of the City Council of Oregon City and the City Engineer, which will be paid to and received by the said Portland Railway, Light and Power Company in full for the use of said bridge by the public traveling over the same other than by being transported upon the cars of said Portland Railway, Light and Power Company.

Section 4. The Portland Railway, Light and Power Company shall file with the Recorder of Oregon City, Oregon, their written unconditional acceptance of this Ordinance within five days after the same shall have been approved by the Mayor of Oregon City or this ordinance shall be void.

Section 5. Whereas the condition of the present bridge across said creek at said point is dangerous and unsafe to travel, an emergency is hereby declared to exist, and it is necessary for the immediate protection of the people crossing the same, and this ordinance shall take effect and be in force immediately upon its approval by the Mayor.

Read first time and ordered published at a special meeting of the City Council held on the 11th day of May, 1911, and to come up for second reading and final passage at a special meeting of the City Council to be held on the 25th day of May, 1911, at 8 o'clock P. M.

IN VANITY FAIR.

Caprices of the Fashion Leaders Are Startling and Varied.

Many of the new lingerie gowns have trimmings of flowered, brocaded or striped satin or of two tones of plain satin of the same color. The satin is used in insets on both skirt and bodice, or it may be used around the foot of the skirt and for a part of the waist.

Garters are made of the brocaded ribbons which are now so handsome or of satin ribbon trimmed with the finest ribbon flowers. The gold bordered satin ribbons are used used for this purpose. They are fitted on the rubber, and a narrow lace is fitted under the gold bordered edge.

Striped ribbons may be used on hats for morning wear.

For elegant dresses gold increases its popularity every day.

This smart bathing suit is adapted to serge, pongee, mohair or flannel.

BATHING SUIT.

This model was of serge trimmed with a band of silk. The suit consists of blouse, skirt and bloomers. The blouse is cut in one with the short sleeves, and the skirt is six gored.

The Veteran's Story

A Southern Civil War Hero, and the Result

By JAMES D. MOREHOUSE.

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

My meeting with my wife is a curious story in itself, and illustrates the fact that there is no rule whatever for love.

When I was in the service, with that force which was opposing Stonewall Jackson in the Shenandoah valley, I was sent down to an outpost stationed at a little town some twenty miles south of our main army with a message to the colonel commanding there. While waiting for some written communications the colonel was getting ready for me to take back a young girl came into his headquarters and asked for a pass. She was as trim a little body as I ever saw, bright red cheeks and Auburn hair—something one seldom sees in the south. She struck my fancy the moment I looked at her. I was standing behind the colonel, who was writing at a pine table. The girl said she wished to go north to relatives in Harrisburg, Pa. The colonel wouldn't give her a pass to do so. She was about to turn away disappointed when I tipped her a wink. You must forget I'm an old duffer and picture me as a boy of twenty, full of the old scratch. I thought what a pleasing episode it would be for me to escort the girl north. When I winked at her it was to convey information of a plan I had conceived to help her out. Then I rushed forward and throwing my arms about her neck gave her a smack. She didn't resent it. "Why, Mag?" I cried. "How in the world came you here?"

—She caught on at once. "I came down just before the war opened, and I've been trying to get back north ever since."

"How's the folks?"
"Pretty well. Mother's in poor health."

"Why do you wish to go north?"
"To do something to make a living. A girl can't earn anything down here."

"Colonel," I said, "I wish to introduce my cousin, Maggie Allen."

Luckily she had not given any name. The colonel shook her hand and told her that since she was my cousin he would most certainly give her a pass. I vouching for her. I told him that we had been brought up together as children, and I knew that every member of her family were strong Union sympathizers. He wrote the pass and in a little while gave me the dispatches, then the girl and I started northward on a twenty mile ride on horseback.

She was the most delighted girl at the trick I had played you ever saw. Her eyes fairly danced with mischief. She couldn't talk about anything else. We rode along for a matter of ten miles, when, coming to a fork in the road, she said that if I didn't mind waiting for her she would like to go and say goodbye to an aunt of hers who lived half a mile up the divorcing road. I had been riding twenty miles south and still had ten miles to go on my return. So I told her that if she would excuse me I would wait for her under a big tree at the fork. She said she wouldn't be gone long and started. I dismounted, lay down at the foot of the tree, lit my pipe and pretty soon fell asleep.

When I awoke I looked into the face of "my cousin" standing in the midst of a dozen or more Confederate soldiers. She smiled at me and said:

"I'm sorry to return evil for good, but the truth is I'd been trying for some time to get up into this region with certain information I'd been gathering about your army movements for General Jackson. These gentlemen have been waiting for me near here and I just rode over to deliver my information and tell them that you were here with some more of the same kind. Please let me have your dispatches."

I never was so completely done up in my life. I couldn't do anything but give her the documents, which she handed to an officer. They debated what to do with me and finally concluded that as a prisoner I would only be an encumbrance, so after holding me for a while they let me go on.

I left them, vowing inwardly that some day I would make that girl pay for the way she had treated me. But some day didn't come till after the close of the war. I was retained in the service and in Virginia for a while in 1865, and one day, getting a leave of absence, I went over into the Shenandoah valley to hunt her up. I found her at her home on a tobacco plantation.

The most satisfactory vengeance a man can vent upon a woman is to make her love him, then hit her. I was quite full enough of bitterness toward her to play that game on her if I could. I pretended to think her action toward me very bright and declared that instead of making me hate her it had only drawn me toward her. This had a good effect, and she seemed to feel sorry for what she had done, though it was in the line of her duty.

I played my game so well that I succeeded completely; not at once, for I made several trips to see her. Then when the pear was ripe I prepared to take my revenge. After some deliberation I concluded simply to drop her without a word of farewell.

I dropped her for four days; then rode over to see her and told her that I loved her, and if she wouldn't marry me I would blow out my brains. She consented, and for twenty years I never knew an unhappy moment. She is waiting for me and I am impatient to go to her.

PITCHERS CANNOT BEAR TO SEE THEIR ARMS FAIL

When Baseball Fever is There Nothing Will Take Place of Work in Box—Salary Wing Twirl-er's Big Asset.

"Pretty soft for"—have the fans often remarked when one of the pitchers was forced to warm the bench because of an injury to his pitching arm. "Pretty soft to just sit there and watch the other fellows play while his salary goes on just the same."

It does look pretty soft for the pitcher in question, but there is another side to the situation which perhaps does not appeal to the average baseball fan. A pitcher's asset in making his livelihood is his pitching arm. When that goes back on him he must seek other means of earning his bread and butter and providing for his family.

Perhaps he has been in the game long enough and has been earning a handsome salary so that he is fairly well fortified against any possible inroads of poverty. Perhaps he has made some shrewd investments which have placed him independent in a way. Perhaps he has some other profession that he can fall back on. Many have, now that college men are so numerous in professional baseball.

But whether he has a large nest egg laid away or not, no big league pitcher likes to see his salary wing going back on him or the victim of injury, for earning from $3,500 to $5,000 by pitching some thirty or forty games during the six months of the summer campaign is far better than drawing down $25 or even $50 a week the year around.

AMATEUR HORSE RACING.

Coming Season Promises to Be a Banner One.

The United Hunts Racing association believes that the coming season will be the greatest in the history of amateur racing. Announcement of the approved dates for the year shows that meetings will be held at points that have never raced before, and the support will come not alone from those that have hitherto been patrons of this branch of the sport.

Military races will be a strong feature of the year. They are being arranged for at various points and will be on the fat and over the steeply ascended courses. The war department is aiding in every way the progress of these races. At Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., they are building a steeplechase course two miles in one circuit for the purpose of developing the horses now quartered there. At other posts, especially at Fort Riley, Kan., and at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., horses are being schooled as jumpers under the advice of the expert.

The decision of the United Hunts Racing association to give a spring meeting is a new departure. Beginning at Richmond on May 20, then to Baltimore for the meeting of the Maryland United Hunts, followed by the United Hunts and the Brookline meets, means about five weeks of sport for the amateurs.

ALTIZER IS MAKING GOOD.

Cincinnati Fans Believe Him a Great Shortstop.

For years, ever since the days when Tom Corcoran began to decline, there have been two questions bothering managers of the Cincinnati Reds, shortstop and pitchers. But Clark Griffith believes that the shortstop problem is solved. He thinks the infield gap has been filled to a nicety by Dave Altizer. This season still is young, but to Griffith Altizer looks like the man for the place.

Since the start of the campaign Altizer has been playing a great game. Cincinnati fans are marveling at his fielding stunts, and he is doing some fine work with the stick. This is Altizer's third trial in the big leagues. He has played with Washington, Chicago and Cleveland. Last season he was with the Minneapolis team in the American association, where he played a wonderful game.

Star Pitchers Seem in Old Days.
"In the old days teams had one star pitcher; now they have one on the slab every day," argues Hugh Jennings.
