and the organization is thankful for the information. Albert Carter, who is contractor of the men employed by the Washington Street, a few days ago came across a team of four horses trying in vain to pull a heavy van of furniture up the steep grade on Washington Street near Eleventh. He told the driver, who had come to this city from Portland, to remove the two front horses from the wagon and he would fasten the cable which is used in the operation of the dirt car on that street. The driver immediately consented, and the cable hauled the wagon up the hill with ease. Actions of this kind are always appreciated by the Humane Society.

THAT OLD SPOTTED COW By M. QUAD Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.

The village of Medina had long been at peace. No one could recall when there had been a lawsuit or any trouble in the church. No fires had taken place, and no one had been drowned in the mill pond. All this was not changed in the twinkling of an eye, but in about a week. The Widow Strong moved over there from Grantville, and one of the things she brought with her was an old spotted cow. She had a moral and legal right to do this. She also had a moral and legal right to let that old cow run at large in the streets. That is the custom in most all villages. The cow was staid up, but with no critical eye. She was judged to be good tempered and law abiding. She betrayed a becoming modesty and had no quarrels. But the town was deceived in that cow. Deacon Egram awoke one morning to find her in his garden. She had eaten every stalk of his green corn. He was a good man, the deacon, but he felt it his duty to take a club to that old cow and thump and pound her and run her out of his garden. Within two hours after he had done so he had a lawsuit on his hands. The Widow Strong proposed to stand by her cow at all hazards. Of course the deacon had to bring a counter suit. That old spotted cow broke into another garden. There was no corn there, but she was not a particular cow. She filled up on beets, radishes and cucumbers and in the morning was found complacently chewing her cud in the onion bed. The garden of a third citizen was spoiled, then a fourth and fifth. At sundown that cow would be lying in the dusty street with half closed eyes and a look of innocence on her face. Three hours later she would be playing the role of devastator. Most of the fences had stood for twenty years, and she found little trouble in pushing her way through them. When her eccentric conduct became known dozens of citizens sat up nights to get a whack at her. She did not always come off a winner, but with the tater bugs to aid her she did fairly well. Every time she was found in a garden she was thumped; every time she was thumped meant a lawsuit; every time there was a new lawsuit the town was divided again. Things couldn't go on that way. The selectmen of the village held a special meeting and decided to officially appeal to the Widow Strong to sell out that old cow to the butcher. "Not if I know myself," was her reply. "I have owned that cow for thirteen years, and I don't propose to see no butcher make beef of her. It isn't the cow, but the fences. Make 'em fix up their fences, and the cow will stay on the outside."

Then the selectmen held a special meeting and resurrected an old ordinance by which a stray cow could be impounded and held for any damage it might do. A delegation waited on the widow to notify her, and she laughed in their faces. "No such bluff goes with me," she added. "There are thirty cows at large in this town. If you take mine you take the others. Go to grass with your old ordinance."

The minister of the only church in the village had kept clear of the affair up to now, but things were getting so hot that he was dragged in. He was asked to call on the widow and talk cow to her—talk old spotted cow. He didn't fancy the job, but still he called. Of course he had a lot to say before he got around to the cow question, and he had scarcely touched upon it when the widow's chin was in the air and she replied: "I tell you I won't have that dumb animal abused! She's stood by me, and I'm going to stand by her."

The good man went away disheartened. And yet, after all, it was he who solved the problem. He heard that Elder Comstock, widower, had been seen calling on the widow, and he sent for him and said: "Elder, are you well enough acquainted with the Widow Strong to form an opinion regarding her?" "Very set in her ways," was the reply. "You are alone in the world, elder?" "Yes."

"You managed your other wife?" "I did."

Heart to Heart Talks. By EDWIN A. NYE. HE CAME BACK. Why did the millionaire of St. Louis who fled to Paris during the boodle exposures in that city and was indicted for alleged bribery return recently and give himself up? What is there in the breast of the wrongdoer that makes him always long to go to the place most dangerous, the scene of his wrongdoing? Why? The St. Louis man did not come back because of lack of money. His wealth is estimated at $20,000,000, made in the brewing business. So far as money is concerned, he could have remained in exile indefinitely. And yet—With unlimited means and freedom to roam the world, nine years was the limit of his ability to stay away from his old home. Why? It has been proved over and over again in the history of the race that the old Bible is right when it says: "Be sure your sin will find you out."
