BUTTERFLY.

Dartus, king of Persia, had a beaudful rose garden in his palace grounds, where he used to wander every summer day.

One day when Dartus was in his garden he noticed that there were a great many butterflies on the Rowers, and be thought they looked very prettyso pretty, in fact, that he determined to have the walls of one of his rooms painted pale pink and covered with butterfiles' wings. Of course a great number was required to cover the walls, so Darius ordered every one in his kingdom to bring him 100 butterdies in ten days' time.

At the end of ten days the king had many millions of butterflies brought to his palace. The workmen then proceeded to fasten the wings on the walls. It happened that the queen of the butterflies had been caught and was now on the wall with many of her subjects. The butterdy king was dreadfully distressed over the loss of his dear wife, so on midsummer night (the only night when all fairles meet together; he told his trouble to the queen of the fairles. Queen Mab was so touched by the king of the butterfles' sad story that she agreed to help him to be revenged on Darius and to

At midnight Mab sent one of her attendants to the palace of Darius to gather all the butterfles from off the walls and to form them into one huge butterfly and to give it life. When Princess Rozana, Darius' little daughter, opened the door of the room the next morning she was knocked down by the great butterfly, which escaped, and was picked up unconscious by her nurse and placed in her bed. The doctor was then sent for, but when he saw her he said that she was dangerously ill and that she would have to have the greatest care taken of her or she would not recover. After the butterfly bad flown out of the palace it went in the rose garden and ate every rose that was to be found. Then it went into the orchard and ate all the fruit, and so on throughout the whole kingdom.

Princess Rozana grew worse and worse. She had a great destre to have some roses in her room, but the butterfly had eaten every rose in the country, so that it was quite impossiole to obtain any for her.

One night when the doctors, nurses and her parents were at her bedside Roxana began to talk, but it was not o any one in her room. It was to the fairy queen, who told her that if a magic potion could be obtained and given to the butterfly she would get well again and everything in the kingdom would come right. When Darius heard this he was so glad that he sent all his staves out to the mountains and woods to gather herbs for the potion. By 7 o'clock the next morning they had all returned with the required herbs, which were at once taken to Roxana, who mixed all the juices from the different berbs together. As soon as this was done there was a great commotion outside the window, and when the king looked he saw that it was the butterfly. He opened the window and let it come in. It settled on the floor near the bed of the princess, just near enough for her to give it the potion. When this was done there was a flash of violet light which blinded every one for a few minutes. Though they could not see, they heard a sound as of many insects flying about. After about five minutes they were able to open their eyes, and they saw millions of butterfiles flying about in the room and fluttering one by one out of the open window.

By the time the last one had gone Rozana was up, dressed and quite well again. The king of the butterflies was so glad to have his wife back again that he invited Queen Mab to come and visit them. The queen was so delight-ed that she felt in a better temper than she had ever been in before, so she sent a fairy to restore all the gar-dens in the land of Persia and to make them produce more plentiful supplies than they had ever done be-fore. Darius and Rozana were very leased to see so many roses and also butterfiles in their rose garden. Darius never harmed them again, and he passed a law that if any one killed one they were to be heavily fined.

"A man named Saunder claims to trees immune from diseases by the application of some chemicals to the roots, especially apple trees. He claims that they will be cured of anthracknose, and that the codling moth will not bother such trees for six years and that no spraying is required on treated trees other than a light spray of concentrated lye once every two or three years to keep moss off the trees. Mr. Saunder gave me the name of Professor Cordley as re-ference, so I ask the college to give me its opinion. In the course of treating such ailments, physicians have demonstrated beyond question the value of certain drugs in their treatment and, following the formula used by a physician especially successful in such cases, Rexall Vegetable Compound has been
