A Neat Trick

By JEROME WILLIAMSON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When railroads were first built the car was a string of stagecoaches joined together. We in America at the very beginning abandoned this form and opened the car from end to end. In Europe they still retain the stagecoach pattern. Their coaches are built in compartments, though those on through trains are connected by a passage at one side. Their way trains are the same as they were some eighty years ago.

I was traveling one day in a way train and looked in a compartment with one other passenger, a young woman. Soon after the train started she asked if she might smoke a cigarette. When a compartment is used for smoking over there they put up a notice to that effect. I felt pleased that she was a smoker herself, granted her permission at once and drew forth a cigar.

"You must first have a whiff with me," she said, "then you may smoke your cigar." She handed me an open box of cigarettes. "These are something very fine. Try one."
I accepted the offer. The woman turned away from me to put the box back in the satchel from which she had taken it and took a cigarette for herself while her back was toward me so that I couldn't see her doing it. I lit mine and as soon as I began to smoke felt a delicious languor. I should have suspected that something was wrong and thrown the weed away, but I was enraptured and soon fell into a delicious trance.

The woman kept her eyes on me and presently asked me to hand her a novel she had left on the seat beside me. I couldn't move even a finger. She had evidently expected as much and had asked me to hand her the book to see if I were able to do so. As soon as she was satisfied that I was powerless she took off her dress and hat and threw them out of the window. There was a man's costume underneath the dress, and it was evident that the pretended woman was a man. He took a felt hat out of his bag and put it on, then, taking a paper out of his coat pocket, he put it in mine.

All this was done between two stations about ten miles apart, although the train went pretty slow. When we reached the second station the man got out of the train, leaving me still powerless. I was just as conscious of the situation as if I had not inhaled the cigarette—I surmised that the man was a criminal fleeing from justice and had put papers in my pocket that would cause his pursuers to think that I was the man they were looking for. Why he wished them to think so I fancied to be because they were hot on the pursuit and he wished to gain time by throwing them off the track.

The train seemed to be delayed in starting again. It appeared to me that it must be waiting for something. What was my horror to see several men come to the door of the compartment led by the man who had drugged me.

"That's the man," he said.
The effect of the cigarette had passed off sufficiently to enable me to protest. But the man interrupted me.
"I tell you," he said to the others, "he's the notorious Cartouche, who a day or two ago escaped the French police. I saw him in court once and know him the moment he entered the train. If you don't believe me search him. He may have something that will identify him on his person."
My blood ran cold. I knew of Cartouche, who was under sentence of death. I was ordered out of the coach, but as I had not recovered the use of my limbs they were obliged to pull me out. They placed me on a baggage roller and went through my pockets. A letter addressed to Jacques Cartouche was found on me. At that moment the train pulled out and my accuser, jumping on the footboard, went off with it. I was taken to the town jail. On the arrival of the next train police officers arrived. The moment they saw me they knew they had been tricked. I told them my story, and they knew by my description of my accuser that he was Cartouche himself. But the train on which they came had gone on and they were obliged to wait for the next to get on in the chase.

I considered myself lucky to escape as easily as I did, for the police believed my story, saying that it was just like Cartouche, who had played that and similar games before.
By a very singular coincidence I saw Cartouche again, though some years later. I returned to America. On the steamer I found the stern fenced off with canvas. There was an opening between the canvas and an after cabin through which I could look into that portion of the deck which had been fenced off for the use of the steerage passengers. While looking through this aperture who should I see but a man whom I immediately recognized as Cartouche.

I was sorry I had seen him, for I felt it incumbent on me to prevent his landing in America. Had he been going the other way I should have held my peace. But as a criminal coming to my own country my duty as a citizen was to inform the immigrant commissioners of his identity. On reaching New York I told my story and the criminal was sent back to the port from which he sailed. What became of him after his return I don't know, but he was smart enough to cheat the gallows more than once, and he may have used another as he used me.

FOREIGN FRUIT CROP B.G.

Showings in Eastern States is Also Promising.
PORTLAND, OR., May 27.—(Special.)—The Northwestern Fruit Exchange of Portland, reports as follows:

In our last bulletin covering the fruit crop outlook for 1911, we promised to have a report concerning European fruit crops, which follows. The information set forth in this report is gleaned from various authentic sources, and confirmed by an English operator who recently paid us a visit. It will be remembered that fruit crops in Europe last year were exceedingly light. In fact, for a large portion of the season there was virtually a fruit famine in England. This year conditions appear to be reversed. Weather conditions have been extremely favorable, and the season is sufficiently far advanced to obviate any particular danger. Apples and pears are looking extremely well, and the plums will be unusually abundant. These same conditions exist for the most part in the principal producing countries on the continent.

In France all sorts of fruits promise a big yield except apricots. Holland is a considerable producer of apples, and the present prospects are for the largest crop on record. All in all, conditions in practically all of the apple-raising states east of the Mississippi River are very flattering indeed. New York state continues to report a very fine showing for fall fruit and greenings. The consensus of opinion seems to be that Baldwin's have bloomed irregularly and will be a little shy. The Hudson River counties are due for a big crop this year, and it looks as though they are going to have it.

West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania have excellent showings, as have also Michigan and Illinois. It is a little early as yet to say anything concerning the New England states. However, they have had a very heavy bloom. The importance of Maine as an apple-growing state is beginning generally to be recognized, and the indications are that in the future it will become very prominent. Utah expects to ship a record-breaking crop this year. Official estimates place the prospective increase over 1910 at 200 cars. The apple crop is expected to be slightly larger than last year, and the peach crop very much larger.

PUPILS MAKE MERRY AT PICNICS IN PARKS

AFTERNOON DEVOTED TO GAMES AND ICE CREAM AND CAKE ARE SERVED.

It is estimated that more children attended the public school picnics Monday than ever before. The afternoon was devoted to games, and ice cream and cake were served. All the children had a good time, and they declared that the picnics were the best ever held. The first and third grades of the Barclay school held their picnics in the Twelfth Street Park. The members of the other grades had an indoor social at the school.

Some of the pupils of the Eastham school went to the Seventh Street Park, some to the Twelfth Street Park and the remainder to the Seventh Street Park. Superintendent Tooze has allowed a half day for picnics to members of all the grades.

JAMES H. CAREY TELLS OF WORLD'S PROGRESS

INTERESTING ADDRESSES MADE AT MEETING OF MEN'S BROTHERHOOD.

James H. Carey, of the Willamette Pulp & Paper Company, made an interesting and instructive address at a meeting of the Men's Brotherhood of the Methodist Episcopal Church Monday evening. Mr. Carey told of the general progress that is being made, and declared that the world was better off than ever before. Vice-President Bork, of the Congregational Brotherhood, also spoke, calling attention to the benefits of brotherhood.

While the attendance was not as large as Rev. Zimmerman had expected, a great deal of interest was manifested in the meeting, and the addresses were thoroughly enjoyed. The musical numbers were unusually good. A supper prepared by the Ladies' Aid Society was one of the best ever given at the church.

Three-Fourths Are Women. Careful observers among the medical profession estimate that of those who seek the services of a physician three-fourths are women. Many of these women are without question in need of surgical treatment, but perhaps the majority of them will be greatly benefited by medical treatment only.

In the course of treating such ailments, physicians have demonstrated beyond question the value of certain drugs in their treatment and, following the formula used by a physician especially successful in such cases, Rexall Vegetable Compound has been placed upon the market.

Many women have learned by experience that their ailments were of such a nature that they themselves might administer satisfactory treatment. While we do not recommend such a procedure, but strongly advise that you consult with your physician, we cannot speak too highly of the value of Rexall Vegetable Compound for use in such cases.

Please remember that Rexall Vegetable Compound can be obtained only at our store—The Rexall Drug Store.
