Some folks get so in the habit of saying, "Whoa!" to their horses when they do not mean it, that these faithful animals cannot tell when their masters do really mean to have them stop, so they keep going. When you say, "Whoa!" mean it. That is the only way your horses have of knowing what to do.

THE CRACK OF THE WHIP

By SADIE OLCOTT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Nell Walker had been courting me for some time, but no proposal came. One day he told me where the hitch was.

"Amiability," he said, "is indispensable in a wife. How can I know before marriage that you are amiable?"

"You show a great deal of good sense," I replied. "There is a great deal in what you say. Come and take up your quarters with us for a month. There you will see me every day and often when I am off my guard. I shall be compelled to show my natural disposition."

"And as soon as the month is over we will enter upon that other month called the honeymoon," he cried enthusiastically, and throwing his arms around my neck, he covered my face with kisses.

Now, we women have a way of doing things by strategy. I didn't feel any more fear of betraying a disagreeable nature with Nell in the house than when he came to call on me. I knew well enough that matrimony is different from courtship and that when two people settle down to work in double harness there is going to be a good deal of friction, for while, at any rate, I thought it a fine chance to let Nell see before marriage that these frictions are not all the wife's fault I was especially equipped to do this for my little brother Jack was at home, and I well knew that if Nell could stand Jack's antics without losing his temper he would be quite able to stagger under my most glaring faults.

Nell came and settled himself for the trial—my trial. He hadn't said anything about being tried himself, and I didn't tell him that he was to be under observation. Nell went to business in the morning, returning about 5 in the afternoon. Jack took him in charge as soon as he arrived. Nell tried to get rid of him, but Jack stuck like a leech. Nell would be reading poetry to me in the garden. Jack would come up behind him and with a stick and a horse's hair and a tlay ball of paper would make him think that a bumblebee was lighting on his nose. Jack sneaked into Nell's room and filled his underclothing on the inside with pins. Nell got the clothing on then had to take it off again and wash an hour picking out the pins. He was late to business that day and came home in a very bad humor.

By such innocent juvenile expressions of a child's nature did Jack in gratiate himself into Nell's disfavor. Nell remarked that the boy had been very badly brought up, whereupon I simply said that it was evident he didn't like children. To me these little pranks were delightful. Nell said that, the boy being my brother, I was doubtless used to him.

Jack during this preparation for a honeymoon found a boy he would rather play with than annoy Nell. So I was obliged to bribe my brother with candy every day and the promise of a football at the end of the season to keep him at home during this test of my disposition. Besides, I was obliged to conjure up methods for harassing my lover and suggesting them to the dear boy. When Nell was snoring Jack poured sand in his ear. Then Jack would steal up behind Nell and slip a small piece of ice down his back under his clothing. And one day when Nell and I were walking over the lawn together Jack, who was watering the grass with the hose, turned it on my companion and drenched him.

This was the climax of a long term of annoyances, and Nell could not have kept his equanimity any longer unless he had been descended from the angels. He broke loose in a profusion of Bible quotations in which the word "damnation" occurred oftentimes. Then he ran after Jack, vowing that he would knock every bit of spirit out of his villainous little boy.

"Mr. Walker," I exclaimed severely, "how can you speak so of the dear child?"

"Child!" he cried. "Beilion, rather!"

"Mr. Walker," I continued in a dignified tone, "I am disappointed. I supposed that your disposition was as gentle as a lamb's. I find that you are easily angered and when angered not only fierce, but vindictive. How fortunate that I should have discovered the true acerbity of your makeup. Our engagement is at an end. Had I married a man with such a temper I should have looked forward to the rest of my life with horror."

"These last words were the same as he had used to me, but he didn't remember them."

"And had I married you," he retorted, forgetting himself in a new burst of anger, "one in whose veins flows the blood of that little viper, I would—"

I walked straight into the house and shut the door after me.

Where he stayed that night I didn't know, but the next morning he came to me and on bended knee begged me to forgive him. I asked him if he wished to test my disposition any further, and he said he was quite satisfied with it. Then I forgave him.

I do think men are the stupidest creatures in the world. And yet they think themselves superior to women. They have so many theories about them for our guidance. They bluster and arrogate to themselves, but they all know the crack of a woman's whip.

LENA STREBIG AND CHARLES BECHER WED

CEREMONY IS PERFORMED AT HOME OF BRIDE'S BROTHER.

The marriage of Miss Lena Strebig, formerly of Medford, Wis., and Charles Becher, of this city, was solemnized on Sunday morning at 8 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Strebig, at Tenth street and Railroad avenue, Rev. W. R. Kraxberger, pastor of the Lutheran church, officiating. Mrs. Fred Metzner acted as matron of honor, and Fred Metzner as best man. The bride wore a pretty gown of white crepe de chine and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses. The living room, where the ceremony was performed, was in pink and white roses, and the dining room was in red roses. Owing to the recent death of the bride's father, Fred Strebig, the affair was very quiet.

Immediately after the ceremony the bridal party left for New Era, where they were given a reception at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Clement Dietz, and where a sumptuous dinner was served. The following were present: Mr. and Mrs. Fred Metzner, Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Strebig, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Whittier, Mrs. Lena Bevis, George Mielke, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Becher, of this city; Miss Sedonia Gelbrich, Emil and Ernest Gelbrich, of New Era; Mr. and Mrs. Bertholtz, Misses Emma and Freda Bertholtz, Otto, Bruno and Arnold Bertholtz, Mr. Kram and daughter, Miss Edna, Mr. and Mrs. Dietz and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Becher, upon their return to this city, went to their home at 113 High street, which has been neatly furnished. Mrs. Becher came to this city about one year ago from Medford, Wis., and has been making her home with her brother, Henry Strebig, but recently returned from a visit to her home in Wisconsin, where she was called by the death of her father. Mr. Becher was in business in Portland before coming to Oregon City. He has a responsible position with the Oregon City Manufacturing Company.

Strawberry jam: Pour a cupful of red currant juice over two pounds of granulated sugar and let it stand for twenty minutes, while you boil over a slow fire two pounds of mashed strawberries, stirring constantly. Add the juice for half an hour; skim, and when cold seal in tumbler with paraffine. Sugar and currant juice and simmer.

Needles are small and easily lost, but just obtain a small bottle to keep them in and you will not be bothered that way any more.
