LOCAL BRIEFS

Light lunch and coffee served Tuesday and Wednesday, Harris' grocery. T. E. Binford, of this city, has purchased a 40-horsepower touring car. Miss Grace Whitehouse spent Sunday with Mrs. W. R. Stafford. Don't miss the coffee demonstration at Harris' grocery. Mrs. Brown and son Lee, were in this city on business Tuesday. John Brown, of Carus, was in this city on business Tuesday. Special prices on the best coffee this week, Harris' grocery. William Lucke, one of the prominent business men of Canby, was in this city on business Tuesday. Mrs. Carrie Jones, of Baker, is visiting at the home of her uncle, F. J. Jones, of Parkplace, for a week. Miss Ronea Stafford has gone to Corvallis to take a course in the college. Without stage will leave the Electric Hotel each day at 2 o'clock p. m. Adolph Fredrick, of Logan, one of the prominent young farmers of that place, was in this city on Tuesday. Mrs. John Davis, of this city, went to Sellwood Tuesday, on a business trip. An addition is being built to the residence owned by Mrs. Marie Grasser, of this city. Dr. E. A. Sommer, formerly of Oregon City, has moved his office to 1017 Corbett building, Portland. Charles Spence, of Beaver Creek, was in this city on Tuesday, being accompanied by his daughter, Miss Echo Spence. Miss Nellie Miller, of Portland, has arrived at Gladstone to spend a week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Chamberlain. Thomas McCarty and family, and Mrs. Schoenborn, of Carus, were among the Oregon City visitors on Tuesday.

Fred Shaver and George Gregory, prominent residents of Molalla, transacted business in this city on Tuesday, having come in the former's auto. Harry Miller, circulation manager of the Oregon City Enterprise, returned Tuesday from Eldorado and other sections of the county.

Mrs. J. B. Robinson and two sons, Kenneth and Don, and Mrs. J. Keating and two children, Rodney and Virginia, were in this city visiting relatives Tuesday.

Miss Pearl Jones, who has been for the past week at the Moeck's sawmill for the benefit of her health, has returned to her home at Parkplace much improved in health.

D. K. Bill leaves this morning for Seaside, and from there will go to Cannon Beach, where he will remain for several weeks. Mr. Bill will visit with his son, Lester E. Bill, who is in charge of Hotel Hill, this establishment belonging to Mr. Bill and his son. This is one of the most delightful summer resorts, and Hotel Hill will no doubt have a good business the coming season.

Oral A. Welsh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Welsh, of this city, returned Saturday from Ann Arbor, Mich., where he is a student in the medical department of the University of Michigan. Mr. Welsh visited relatives in the East, among them being his aunt, Mrs. Myrtle E. Patton, of Greenville, Iowa, formerly of this city, also his mother's uncle Samuel Robinson, of Indiana, as well as Mr. Rote and family, of Franklin, Indiana, who was a general missionary a few years ago in Oregon, and who made his home at McMinnville. In all of Mr. Welsh's travel he thinks there is no place like Oregon. He will return to Ann Arbor in September to complete his whole year's course in medicine.

EASTERN APPLE YIELD TO BE BIG

Outlook in Oregon, However, is Not Promising.

The Northwest Fruit Exchange reports as follows regarding apples: Statements in regard to the crops east of the Missouri river are conflicting in many ways, but the general tone confirms the previously reiterated advice that the yield in those districts will be much larger than has been harvested for a number of years. Many sections in the East have been visited with abundant rains which have helped strengthen the situation. On the whole, the rains have been of exceptional value at this time, following the extremely hot weather and severe droughts. The June drop will be much heavier than was expected, while a number of localities report blighting of some varieties. It seems certain that New York and Michigan, at least, will have bumper yields, especially in the fall varieties. The Virginia promise is very fair crop, although smaller than that of 1910. Information from New York state under date of the 19th shows heavier dropping than is considered desirable in some localities, while others report blighting, but on the average, conditions indicate an exceedingly large volume of tonnage.

Michigan reports are of the same general character. In some districts the summer varieties will be heavier proportionately than the fall apples, but the latter will of themselves exceed the production of the last several years.

Virginia reports are recent and comprehensive. The Shenandoah Valley and Eastern Panhandle of West Virginia promise crops of unusually fine quality, but on the whole the quantity will hardly exceed 65 or 66 per cent of last year's harvest. The shortage is attributed to the late frost, and the excessive drought lasting three weeks. The drop has also been abnormally heavy. The falling of the fruit in the older orchards, which bore heavily last year, will be offset, to a large extent, by the great acreage of young orchards just coming into bearing. The Shenandoah Valley was visited by severe hail, lightning and wind storms on June 6th, the effect of which could not be determined at the time of our advice. Whatever damage has resulted in the southern parts of the valley may be equalized by the benefit of rain fall in the northern sections. The crops of 1910 in seven counties in the Shenandoah Valley aggregated 5,000 carloads.

Northwest conditions continue unchanged. According to best posted sources, the outlook for apples is as follows: Hood River, Oregon, 50 to 60 per cent of last year's crop.

Milton-Freewater, 55 to 60 per cent of last year's crop. Other districts in Oregon about the same average.

Detroit Outfielder's Great Base Running Has Won Many Games—Collins of Philadelphia Another—In 1906 White Sox Speed Boys Best Cubs.

Speed is one of the greatest essentials of modern baseball. It implies quick mental as well as physical action, both offensively and defensively. Take any one of the major league pennant winners within the past decade and you will find that this quality of speed has been strongly evidenced, both individually and collectively. The nation's champion Athletics boast the fleet, Eddie Collins, champion base stealer of the major leagues in 1910. Ty Cobb's speed as much as his hitting ability helped him win three consecutive pennants. It was the speed of the Chicago White Sox in 1906 that upset the Cubs in a world's series, to the amazement of the country. Fred Clarke's Pirates and Frank Chance's Cubs are always at or near the top of the National league heap because, even if they boast no Collins or Cobb, they both have some fast and handy men.

Bidding to bases is also a necessary accomplishment in a great base runner. How to get into top speed. In the quickest possible time and how to slide can only be acquired by constant practice. of the anatomy for in such cases the likelihood of being tagged out, diminished to a minimum. Furthermore, first base and the plate are the only stations which may be overrun after reaching it. At second and third bases the runner must not only touch, but also retain the sack with some part of his person. It is as fatal to slide or miss by an inch as to be caught midway. There are many kinds of slides. Most players prefer to slide feet first, for their steel spikes naturally irritate the fielder. Others usually travel date first, clutching the base with one hand and so holding on more firmly than if they depended solely upon their feet. The player sliding head first has an advantage—outside the natural danger of encountering a fielder's spikes in face, hands, arms or body. He has the big right before his eyes, whereas one who slides feet first does more or less by guesswork once he makes his final leap. But, whether making head first or feet first, a player sliding head first is able to keep an opponent guessing at all times. If a player always slides right into the bag it would be a cinch for the opposition to play him. But it sometimes he slides in from one side, sometimes from an other and again between the legs of his opponent, as sometimes happens, then he has just so much advantage.

Widow Clancy's Second

He Put a Wrong Interpretation on What He Heard. By CLARISSA MACKIE. Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Harry Barry sat under the shade of his broad brimmed hat eating his lunch. It was a queer congregate lunch, the product of the cook's hurried gathering of leftovers. A way off to the westward the Crane and Gabriel were riding back and forth, their forms like pygmies against the blue haze of the foothills. They had consumed their bean sandwiches and doughnuts and, perhaps, even their eggs—Harry Barry shrugged—and were alive and able to ride around as with some agility. As for himself, he felt like a water soaked log; a weight of tons seemed to press on his chest; he felt melancholy and down at heart. There was nothing in the cattle business for him—the bottom had dropped out of everything that bright sunshiny day.

He had been assistant foreman of the Lone Bull ranch, if he had been chief herder of the outfit. If he had been anything except plain Harry Barry, the merriest, warmest hearted scamp the Lone Bull had ever known, he might have won the Widow Clancy. Yes, Harry Barry had been in love, was in love, always would be hopefully in love, with the pretty widow who had bought the ranch next to the Lone Bull and whose chief adviser he had been for several months. He it was who had bounced her former and installed in his place a stout, capable German, who was honest about everything else, and that is very important when a widow's funds are to be disbursed.

A few careless words in the bunk house that morning had turned his complacency into bitter consternation. "Is it true about Ruyter and the widow?" Jim Lewis had asked of Timothy.

"So I hear," Tim had carelessly replied. "Seems Mrs. Clintock put it up to the widow, asking her if Ruyter wasn't the second. And, say, Jim, you oughter seen how Mrs. Clancy blushed."

Harry Barry stood in frozen silence at what he saw behind Ruyter's back. There, disturbed from its rest, among the rocks, was a rattlesnake, coiled to spring. Another instant and Ruyter would be beyond help—Harry's rival would be out of the way.

There was a flash of fire, a report that detonated among the scattered rocks and sent echoing down the canyon. The German lifted both hands above his head and squealed shrilly. "Dead!" he mourned. "Ah, Gott! I'm dead as der doornail!"

"Aw, wake up," Harry permitted himself the pleasure of kicking Ruyter into activity. "That's what's dead as a doornail." He pointed to the twitching body of the rattler, its head was blown to atoms, and the big German stared until his face was as white as paper.

"You did that for me?" he almost whispered. "It's nothing," said Harry sullenly as he threw a leg over his horse. There came a shrill cry down the canyon and a clatter of hoofs as Mrs. Clancy pounded recklessly among the loose stones. She drew rein at sight of the two men, and her eyes lingered longest on Ruyter's dejected form.

"They said you and Ruyter were going to fight," she said to Harry angrily, her eyes blazing, her hair tinged with the red of the sun. "I haven't hurt your Dutchman," said Harry rudely. "He's perfectly safe."

"He saved my life from dat Mrs. Clancy," said Ruyter agitatedly, pointing a fat finger at the remains of the rattler. She shuddered and then recovered her equanimity. Once more she was the cool, level headed little woman that Harry Barry had fallen in love with.

"Go on, Ruyter," she commanded the German; "you're got a lot of matters to clean up, you know." "Yes, Mrs. Clancy," he said, gladly leaving the place. When the echoes of the rattler's shambling hoofs had died away Mrs. Clancy lifted her eyes to Harry's handsome, sunken face and spoke.

"Why did you call Ruyter my Dutchman?" she demanded crisply. "They say—they say—you're going to marry him," stammered Harry, feeling hot and foolish. "I don't know who they are, but they are dead wrong. No, sir; keep your distance! I dismissed Ruyter yesterday, and the Clintocks are following me because he's the second foreman. Egg and since I've been here, her eyes swept his face and then turned away. "Is that why you saved his life?"

"I thought they meant your second husband," said Harry, growing bolder. "I'm not going to have a second husband," said Mrs. Clancy decidedly, yet showing the curve of a pink cheek. "Never!" insisted Harry. But Mrs. Clancy did not answer, yet there was something in her demure curve of her lips that led Harry Barry to feel, riotously happy, and to sing love songs in her pretty ear all the way home.

WIFE CHARGES CRUELTY. Macie Baird Seeks Divorce and $35 Alimony Monthly. Macie Baird, Thursday filed suit against Isom Baird, for divorce, alleging cruel treatment and non-support. They were married in this city, Oct. 27, 1909. Plaintiff avers that she was deserted, and left with no means of support, from May 10, until August 10, 1910, and that defendant several times accused her of intimacy with other men. She asks for the care of their one child, Clarence, and $35 a month alimony.

rocks from which sprouted a little grove of cottonwoods. From out of the rocks there issued a stream of pure water that steamed as it lapped the hot sandy banks. Under the cottonwoods there was a delicious coolness, and Harry staked his horse and flung himself down in the grateful shade and closed his aching eyes.

If he could only stop thinking of the faithless Widow Clancy, who had so ruthlessly broken his heart, Harry would have felt better, but the love smitten young man was sore pressed with recollection of the tender coquetries of the pretty widow who had loved, or pretended she did, and, worst of all, she was going to marry that fat faced German butcher.

Ruyter was fat faced, but there was a certain florid comeliness about his looks as he jogged into Satan's gulch to search for quiet and shade. He did not see Harry Barry, nor did the cattleman see him until Ruyter had dismounted and was strutting about among the stones; then Harry arose and sat bolt upright among the rocks and stared at his successful rival.

"What do you want?" he snarled fiercely. The German stopped short and stared. "That's no way to speak to a chieftain!" he admonished severely. "That's why I say it to you, Ruyter! What are you doing here?"

"I came to cool off," said the German angrily. "Dis Satan's gulch, it's a public property."

"It's not big enough to hold both of us," warned Harry, his hand on his hip pocket. "Den you petter be going some," said Ruyter imperturbably.

"I was here first," argued Harry. "I was here first," argued Harry.

Phloxes Are Striking. The varieties of phlox which grow in a season are suitable for the amateur who wishes to produce a striking effect in her garden. There are so many different varieties that any shade desired except yellow may be found. Varieties differ in height, size and shape of blossom. All are of easy culture. The plants should have a sunny position. They grow rapidly and their blooming season is not long, but may be prolonged by giving plenty of moisture and a partial shade.

Sweet Pea Enemies. Slugs and other pests must be watched for, especially in the evening, when they come out to feed. If put into a pail of strong salt and water they will die very quickly. If small green or brown flies—aphides—appear on the plants, spray them at once with soft soap and water and kerosene or with some insecticide. Syringe the plants with clear water the next day and spray them again and again if necessary, till all the aphides are destroyed.

House Plants. In dark rooms such plants as the palms, the pandanus, the screw pine and New England flax do well. Of the palms the fan and date varieties require least care. The rubber plant is excellent. It is injured by dust and should be washed frequently.
