What Would Americans Do?

What would the Americans do? They would probably elect the President.

dent and a majority of the Representatives, but let us suppose also that their two-thirds majority of the voters should be so distributed that they would be in full control of the state government in two-thirds of the states. Then they would elect twenty-two United States senators, being two-thirds of the senators to be elected to fill vacancies. They could not pass a single Socialist bill beyond the House of Representatives. They must keep up the organization and hold their two-thirds majority until the general election in November, 1914, and they would then re-elect their representatives and get another twenty-two United States senators, being two-thirds of the vacancies that year. But they would still be short of a majority in the United States Senate so they could not pass a bill.

Then in 1916, they must again hold their two-thirds majority to elect the President and their members of the House, and get another twenty-two senators, being two-thirds of the vacancies that year. This would give them a bare two-thirds majority in the United States Senate and at a special session in March, 1917, they could submit to the state Legislature some amendments to the national Constitution that would make their Socialist bills constitutional, if they could get the amendments approved by three-fourths of the states, but the legislatures would not finish voting before about 1920. In the meantime there would be no use of passing Socialist bills because the United States Supreme Court would declare them unconstitutional.

Constitution Must Be Amended.

But even then, after two-thirds of the voters of the United States had voted the Socialist ticket straight through three or four national elections, they would be utterly helpless under the Constitution, because the Constitution of the United States cannot be amended without the approval of three-fourths of the state Legislatures or Constitutional conventions in three-fourths of the states.

Thus the Socialists might be in full control of a two-thirds majority in Congress, there might be a Socialist President, and they might also have full control of thirty-two state governments, and still be utterly helpless until they could win four more of the remaining fifteen states, we shall have by that time. It is clear then, that under our system a two-thirds majority of the American people could not in all eternity make changes in laws by Constitutional methods that could be made by the same majority of the British people by Constitutional methods in twelve months.

But with their two-thirds majority the Socialists could pass a bill increasing the number of judges on the Supreme Court bench from 9 to 21, and then the Socialist President could appoint all the new judges from Socialist lawyers who would guarantee to construe the Constitution "in the light of reason"—Socialist reason, and then they could begin to do what the British people had long ago completed. This was the method adopted by the Republican party to make the issue of legal tender greenbacks Constitutional in the United States.

And remember, my friends, that this is the road Radicals must travel in the United States. A Tory minority of one state, more than one-fourth of all the states in the Union can absolutely block any change in the national Constitution. The American system is emphatically government by a small minority instead of by a plurality, not to say a majority, of all the voters.

Clarence S. Darrow Will Retire When Dynamiting Case Is Ended

CLARENCE S. DARROW of Chicago, principal attorney for the two McNamara's, accused of complicity in the dynamiting of the plant of the Los Angeles Times, announces that when this case is ended he will retire from the practice of law. The legal firm of which he is a member has already been dissolved, and Mr. Darrow has no other law business ahead of him. He says that he will devote his time after the McNamara trial is over to resting, lecturing and literary pursuits. Mr. Darrow at first was not inclined to undertake the defense of the McNamara's, as he said that he feared the hard work necessary would be too much of a strain. The union labor leaders remembered his successful defense of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone of the Western Federation of Miners, and they insisted that Mr. Darrow should represent the McNamara's, and he consented. The case, which has been set for Oct. 11, will be hard fought and will be watched by the entire world.
