LAST CAR LEAVES FOR OREGON CITY AT MIDNIGHT

MAX FIGMAN*"The Substitute" Figman's Next Attraction

Max Figman, under the management of Harry L. Cort in "The Substitute," a farce comedy by Beulah Dix and Evelyn Greenleaf, will open his second engagement of the summer season on next Sunday night. The audiences attending this week's bill, "The Man on the Box," have been excellent and manifested unusual pleasure in the offering and in the work of the players. "The Substitute" is interesting farce, with a plot that is serious in a number of places. Complications are numerous and carried through with a rapid tempo that makes them very interesting while they are being unfolded. James Smith, junior partner of the firm of Vandergift and Smith, attorney, agrees to find a substitute to teach at a country village for the young theological student his sister is to marry, who has been taken suddenly ill. He is unable to secure a minister and goes to the village, his substitute and gets himself into all sorts of absurd and laughable situations. He falls in love with the daughter of the old pastor, who is charged by members of his congregation with having squandered the church fund for the poor on "paint-ed" women. The substitute takes the case as the lawyer for the defense and clears the rector and wins his daughter. Miss Lolita Robertson will be cast as the daughter. Miss Elizabeth DeWitt as Esther Dilly, a sour-tempered, suspicious New England old maid, an extremely comical character. Miss Jane Urban will play Smiths' sister, Mr. Figman of course, appearing in the title role.

There is real heart interest in the story, as well as good clean comedy, and none of the situations is overdrawn or strained. The good old New England atmosphere prevails throughout, especially in the freshness of the garden scene.

Next week Mr. Figman will appear in his latest success, "Mary Jane's Pa," in which he was seen at the Heilig last season under the management of John Cort.
