Wine Drinking. France alone pays taxes in a good year on more than 1,000,000,000 gallons of wine—and there are six bottles to a gallon—while Algeria, planted with vines in the days of the phylloxera, supplies no less than 200,000,000.

There is an old Dutch town not a hundred miles from New York which up to a few years ago, when a button factory was located there, was very much in the condition of New York when that city was called New Amsterdam.

A new minister was called to the church recently, but his call to the pastorate was followed by his being called down, for he shocked the congregation by preaching socialism and woman's rights.

Miss Katrina Van Schoonerhoven, a member of this antiquated congregation, one day lost her bearing so far as to permit the use of her domicile for a suffragette meeting.

"I am," "I am Dr. Pounder. I understand that a meeting of suffragettes recently took place at your house. I hope to make that meeting the beginning of a movement."

"But, doctor, I lent my house only for a purpose in which I take no personal interest."

"We are intending to make a stir in behalf of the suffragette movement, and I am counting on your personal influence to do it."

"I assure you that I am not myself a suffragette, that I—"

"I can't hear you. What we want is to stir up the town in the hope that we may carry the suffragette ticket at the next election and give the privilege to women that is now left solely with men; that we may eradicate that clause in the national constitution which gives the franchise to all except women, Indians and idiots."

"I tell you I shall have nothing to do with your endeavor for the suffragette cause. I take no interest in it. I don't approve of it."

"Just so. I knew you would be with us from the moment I heard that the meeting had taken place at your home. I am arranging for a big meeting to be held on the corner of Van der Deck and Bleeker streets. Your name will be announced in the newspapers as the principal speaker. I am sure your eloquence will win many influential persons to our ranks."

"Dr. Pounder, if you dare announce my name in the newspapers as a speaker at your meetings I shall never speak to you again."

"You say you consent? I knew you would. We are going to have a brass band in attendance: there will be crowds of women distributing suffragette pamphlets and no end of enthusiasm. You will be mounted on a soap box—I have a box provided—and policemen will be on hand to see that you are not jostled by the crowd."

"Dr. Pounder!" "There will be fireworks!" "Dr. Pounder!" "In the evening."

"Dr. Pounder, I wish you to understand that I will have nothing to do with your meeting, and if you insist on mixing me up with the affair I shall call upon my lawyer to get out an injunction to prevent you."

"I will call for you myself in a carriage at 7 o'clock and assist you to the soap box. A limelight will be arranged in an opposite window that will illuminate your face while speaking."

"Dr. Pounder, if you undertake to carry out this program I shall—I wish you would go away from the telephone. You are driving me wild. If you don't stop this persecution I will shut you off."

Gridiron Warrior of the Present is of a Somewhat Different Type From That of Years Ago—New Game Calls For All Around Men.

That the new football rules have been a boon to the popular sport on the gridiron rather than a drawback, as some people argue, is the opinion of many former football stars who have put in actual service at the game and who have studied the question of old and new football from various angles.

Spending of the game in its modern form, Lyle Pettibone, one of the greatest football players that ever donned a uniform at Minnesota, has a few things to say.

"Much has been said pro and con regarding the changes which have been wrought in the game of football since the introduction of the 'open' plays," says the former Gopher star.

"There are a number of points which serve to distinguish the game of today from that which was played seven or eight years ago and prior to that time. So far as the playing rules are concerned the following list comprises most of the changes: First, forward pass; second, outside kicks no called; third, no pushing or pulling of the runner by his teammates; fourth, ten yards to gain in three downs; fifth, seven men on the line of scrimmage; sixth, direct pass from center to runner.

"These changes have done wonders toward opening the game up and improving it from the spectator's standpoint. But they have also altered, influenced and improved the game from the player's standpoint, almost if not quite as much as from that of the spectator."

"The game today is similar to and at the same time different from the old game. The element of speed is more essential today, that of weight somewhat less so. Strength and endurance were necessary under the old rules and are necessary now, but the quality of each which is required is of a different kind. The advantage of brute strength is less noticeable, that of concentrated and quickly applied power more so, while the endurance required is more a matter of lung capacity than of muscular resistance."

"These necessary qualifications have grown into the game during the time it has been undergoing the above noted alterations, and the football player of today is, as a general rule, a different sort of athlete from the gridiron warrior of years ago.

"Injuries, while they may occur during a game, are perhaps more infrequent and less dangerous than in former days. The game today calls for more reckless individual effort by the man carrying the ball, more speed and greater dodging ability.

"Tackling, blocking and interference form a big part in the work of a team under the present system of play.

"Tackling is less spectacular, and of all the points which have been affected by the changes it seems to be the only one which has suffered.

"On the whole, it may be said that the players of today are required to be better all around men than their predecessors were. Where each position formerly called for the possession of some special quality or qualities every position today calls for the possession of all the said qualities. Tackling alone seems to have deteriorated. All the other points which went to make up the successful player in the old game have an enhanced value in the new game.

"The similarity of the old and new games is equally well marked. The big man has the same advantages as formerly, provided he combines with his size the other necessary qualities. Weight is a big factor, and strength and endurance will always be features. But the new game calls for a more general development of them all."

Half a Face Missing. "It is not an uncommon thing," says a man who has been in central Africa, "to meet a native with half of his face missing, and when you ask him how it happened he will tell you that a hyena snapped at him while he was asleep. It is marvelous how the teeth of the animal must be poisonous, and the natives have no antiseptics and a very crude way of treating wounds. When a 'fal,' as the natives call it, comes round the camp howling the 'boys' about all sorts of vile names it. But very often the animal makes no noise whatever, and then next morning is the loss of something discovered."
