'How many miles farther?' yelled Austin above the rushing noise of the big machine.

'Duff! your man strap on a big hamper just as we were leaving' was Moore's question.
'Bless my soul, I forgot all about that! Of course Duff would look out for a bite by the wayside.'

A Way the Baby Has.
'Has the baby had the measles yet, Mr. Popp?'

'Oh, Evelyn!' breathed the other girl quickly.
The two motorists lifted their caps and turned reluctantly away.

'There is a great deal more here than we can ever eat,' said the tall girl calmly. 'So you are quite welcome to lunch with us if you please.'

'You must have found this hamper a heavy load to carry,' remarked Billy Moore mischievously.
'What is that in the bottle, Dora?' 'Tea?'

'But surely somebody will find them,' remonstrated Dora. 'I was going to throw them into the deep thicket, away from temptation.'

'I hope you will permit us to carry your hamper as far as the road,' said Jim as they concluded the meal.
'Certainly,' said Evelyn carelessly, and then, after a hurried whispered consultation with Dora, she said with less assurance: 'I really don't know what to do with this basket. You see, we found it!'

A MESSAGE TO YOU

You know that every advertisement in this paper is a message to you. Each merchant that advertises has something he wishes to bring to your notice. If he did not know that he had an article that would meet with your approval he would not advertise BECAUSE the man that advertises the most is the man that will have his goods under the critical eye of the most people. Thus, advertisers must be most vigilant in the selection of their goods, and keep them to such a standard as to give the buyer absolute satisfaction. Every merchant in the city knows this to be a fact, and if he is successful he must follow this rule. The moral is very plain that you are safe in dealing with those that advertise in the
