ALMOST A TRAGEDY

By GEORGE C. BATEMAN

One Saturday afternoon, not having anything better to do, I went to a vaudeville show in which trained birds, trained animals and trained human beings performed tricks. There was a young married couple among the performers who excited more interest than any of the others. They were both experts with the rifle. The husband would first shoot a bullet into an apple resting on his wife's head; then the wife would do the same with reference to her husband. The room was not darkened, for the day was clear, and the sun shone in through the west windows. The husband first played William Tell, his wife playing Albert; then the wife played Tell to her husband's Albert.

I had but recently come in from the far west and had been obliged again and again to do all kinds of shooting. In a place where a man's life is constantly dependent upon the sureness of his aim he becomes very expert, but there is no one who more fully realizes the danger of trying to shoot near some one without hitting him. These are the reasons why my heart stood still every time one of this couple fired at the apple on the other's head. Had they been enemies, each trying to get in the first shot, it wouldn't have troubled me a bit.

They began their performance by the husband shooting at the apple on the wife's head. Wild west man that I was, my heart stood still till it was over. Then the husband took position to be shot at, and his wife did the shooting. I was watching them from a rear seat. Indeed, I sat several rows back of any one else. I had come from a country where persons were fond of elbow room, and I didn't like sitting in was in this city on business Thursday. the crowd. I hadn't got used to going without my weapon yet. I had tried to and found it like going without a bunch of keys or a knife in one's pocket that had always been there. I had it with me now. When the man got away from houses he turned and said to me sharply:

you and put it on your head." I saw him feeling for a weapon, but before he could get it out I had him covered and ordered him to throw up his hands, which he did. Then when I had convinced him that he was in my power I made him pick up the chip and put it on his head. He did so, and I knocked it off with a bullet. I made him put it back on his head again, but this time instead of knocking it off I was glad to get away with his life. That evening I called on the young couple, told them that I had seen a man throw the sunlight in the wife's eyes and described him. They knew at once who he was and told me all about the matter between them, but it is too long a story to tell here. I told the young man to let the follow alone. He wouldn't likely trouble him again. "But if he does," I added, "just you send for me."

St. Peter's In Rome.

In Rome fifteen architects succeeded one another in the construction of St. Peter's during the pontificates of twenty-eight popes and during a period of 176 years. According to the calculation of Carlo Fontana, the cost of the building, exclusive of the bronze used, was over $60,000,600. It takes $50,000 a year to keep the edifice in repair.

SKIRT NEWNESS.

A Smart Model In Magpie Effect.

Fashion prefers little fullness in the silk underskirt. In many instances the knitted tights are used in preference to skirts of any kind.

Skirts are all straight and narrow in effect, but there's a tendency in the high class lines to slash at intervals at the foot, presumably to add to the walking comfort of the wearer. The striped silk petticoat seen in the illustration is cut on the newest lines. Black and white is the smart color

"Rinkle, you and I would get along all right if you'd move to some neighborhood where I never could see you.' "Bobby, when you go home will you please tell your mamma that I think she ought to wash your face at least once or twice a week?"

Shadow Lace Veil.

The new shadow lace veiling is very charming and quickly gaining a place in the world of fashion. This hits the happy medium between the too heavily patterned and often disfigured lace veil and the anything but smart veilings made of open silk mesh which are very trying to all complexions. The new shadow veils are delicately patterned in a fine web effect, and some of the most becoming of all show a fine and delicately traced pattern in black silk on a pale pink tulle background that does much to enhance the beauty of any complexion that is apt to suffer disfigurement during the cold weather

The Bar Brooch. In every collection of beautiful orna ments the bar brooch finds a place. It is very long and absolutely rigid and is ornamented in various ways. One pattern is set closely with emeralds and rubles alternating, and another is a flashing rivulet of brilliants from end to end. A third has a large pearl in the center flanked by pearls of dwindling sizes to the tinlest possible gems at the ends.

Then again there is the absolutely plain gold bar brooch, which is used for various purposes, from fixing the squash hat in its place to securing the one sided jabot.

Useful Hints. A cloth dipped in salt and rubbed on frosted windows will remove the thickest frost almost instantly. It may be news to some women to hear that a piece of bread burnt to a crust will remove grease on cloth if rubbed upon the spot, following the nap of the cloth. It is also said that if the head of a match, after being lighted and then blown out, is applied to a stain from paint the spot will disappear.
