Animal Doctors In China.

Because of the fondness of the Chinese for animals the veterinary surgeon forms a class by himself. He treats horses, mules, donkeys, camels, cattle, dogs, cats, birds and goldfish. He has four principal prescriptions, each consisting of about a dozen different drugs and each efficacious according to the season of the year. Abscesses are punctured with steel needles, of which he has various forms fering from pulmonary troubles. MOTHER'S WAGES.

What about mother's wages? Father gets his wages, the boys get theirs, and the girls get theirs. Nobody pays mother's wages.

Father does not pay mother's wages because he says it takes all of his to pay the bills and make both ends

The boys say they must have good clothes and some spending money and they cannot pay mother. And the girls complain that their small earnings must go for gowns and hats and ribbons.

Mother merely does the family work without pay. Mother gets up early to get breakfast for father and the boys and hurries them off to their work. She gets the girls a dainty bite and then warms up the scraps for the little ones who go to school. Mother eats between times. It is mother who all day long sweeps and scrubs and dusts and sews and cooks and hustles in the meantime to get two more meals. After supper father sits down to his pipe and evening paper or goes downtown to talk politics. The boys dress and go out. The girls have company. But mother washes the dishes and gets things ready for breakfast, and then sits down to mend and darn socks until bedtime.

Eight hours? Mother works eighteen.

And the next day and the next and the next, so long as she is able to be out of bed, mother keeps up this exacting routine, while the others get all the playtime.

Suppose the family were to employ a housekeeper for this work. She would demand mighty good pay for these two shifts in one. And perhaps she would throw out the back kitchen door as much as her wages,

A Serum Of Youth

A German Professor Gives His Reasons For Disapproving of Its Use

By F. A. MITCHEL

"These American scientists." said Dr. Holwig-Sheinberg, original investigator at the University of Bonn. "make me tired. I have just read an article copied from an American journal stating that one of them has discovered a method of preventing decay newing the primary condition, which is the same thing. He has been experimenting on bacteria and from bacteria hopes to lead up to more complex organisms. Thirty years ago I began where he is beginning today and in ten years had reached a point where I was able indefinitely to perpetuate youth in human beings.'

"You did that!" exclaimed Professor Shroeder, taking his pipe out of his

"WHEN I SAW HER AGAIN I WAS SHOCKED mouth and looking through his spectacles at Dr. Holwig-Sheinberg in astonishment.

"I did," replied the other. "Why, then, did you not announce your discovery? "Because the only case I ever perfected demonstrated that it is not best to interfere too radically with natural processes. "You had an experience?" "I had; one that admonished me to permit persons to grow old in the natural way." "Do tell me about it: I am dying of curiosity.' "Well, I began just where this American began. I made cultures of bacteria, observed the cause of decay and hunted for a serum to prevent it. I failed in this, but discovered one that would kill the decaying bacteria for a certain period and capable of continuing the process ad infinitum. I will not attempt to give you in a nutshell investigations extending over a period of ten years whereby I at last succeed ed in applying my discovery to human beings. All I shall attempt to do now is to give you the principal reason why I did not announce my discovery to the world. "When I had succeeded in keeping monkeys young and frisky my next step was to try my serum on the next and highest type of animal life-man. I had received pecuniary support in my investigations from Baron Wobel and, after trying two or three experiments on subjects, announced to him that I could keep a man at the same apparent age from the moment I began to treat him for an indefinite period. The baron was much interested and asked me many questions concerning my process-what danger there might be to the patient, my ability to contin ue it and what would be the result for him after my death. I satisfied him on most of these points, whereupon he told me that a commoner. Herr Schoffenholer, enormously rich, was desirous of uniting his wealth to the baron's title. Herr Schoffenholer had a daughter aged twenty, and the baron had a son aged two. These were the only children born to either family. The only way to unite the wealth and the title was to marry these two. But the difference of age was an insurmountable difficulty.

"'Now,' said the baron to me, 'if you tan keep Fraulein Schoffenholer at her present age till my son is old enough to marry the two interests may be united. "Here was a chance to try an experiment under favorable conditions. After numerous family councils at which a great deal of opposition was raised Herr Schoffenholer decided the matter by compelling his daughter to submit to my treatment. I was not informed of this compulsion or that the fraulein was in love with a young guardsman, a few years her senior. Had I been I would not have consented to act in the

"I began my treatment on the frautein's twentieth birthday. She responded admirably, and I saw at once and the fraulein and that clandestine expected at this time of the year, meetings were taking place-at long intervals to be sure-between them. Since the fraulein remained youthful and the guardsman was growing older his love for her grew in proportion as the difference in their ages lengthened. What effect this increasing difference had on the fraulein I did not learn, for she kept her feelings to berself. I ment if she wished it, but she told me that, having acceded to her father's order, she would carry it out to the end. "Seventeen years passed. The baby boy Wobel was nineteen, the fraulein thirty-seven and the guardsman forty. The latter had never married, and his love for the fraulein had grown to be a dominant passion with him. He was getting gray and bald and showed oth- this state is wholly a matter of guesser signs of coming old age. On the work. the marriage between his son and Fraulein Schoffenholer till the former came of age. The young man was within a few weeks of twenty-one, and preparations were being made for the wedding when I received a hurry call to the Schoffenholer residence. I found have been a good deal smaller than the fraulein very ill. This was unfor- usual, and this naturally is a factor tunate, for within a few days it would of importance in the marketing of be necessary for me to give her an injection of the serum, and in her weakened condition I did not know what the effect would be. Indeed, I dare not administer it.

"For a time the fraulein's life bung again I was shocked. From a girl of quality stock going at $1.25. twenty she had become a woman of over forty, and her illness had made her look ten or fifteen years older than that. Her hair was almost white, her skin yellow and wrinkled, her teeth badly decayed and her figure bony and angular. Indeed every feature which would have decayed gradually without my treatment had broken down with in a brief period.

"Here was an embarrassing situation. Young Wobel had shown every willingness to marry the girl bis father had provided for him, not only on account of her fortune, but because of her beauty, which was that of a girl, and her intellect, which was that of a mature woman. But pow what would be say when he should see her? Her father begged me to rest. e her youth and when I told him that I had no power to do so stormed at me for a fool and an idiot.

"Young Wobel was not permitted to see his fiancee till a few days before the proposed wedding. When he met a woman who looked to be over fifty. and much broken at that, he collapsed. There was no use in trying to induce him to marry her. Indeed, at her age a marriage would be fruitless and its object defeated.

"I was placed in a very unfortunate position. Every one seemed to consider me to blame for the affair, though I had done only what I had been requested to do. I felt very sorry for Fraulein Schoffenholer, for I was obliged to admit to myself that had I permitted her to grow old as nature intended she would not now have been suddenly plunged into her present distress. In order to make amends 1 wrote a note to her guardsman lover. informing him that the lady he had so long loved was now free to marry him However, I thought it best to permit him to observe her changed condition for himself. He replied thanking me for the information, which he declared had 'thrilled him with an ecstatic happiness.

"He called upon her. When the poor woman saw his shocked expression at her altered appearance she held out her arms to him, putting or just such an appealing smile as would be seductive in a girl of twenty, but was barrible in broken down old woman. He tried to respond, but falled. After a brief interview he excused himself and has never seen her from that day to this. Recently I received his wedding cards and have learned that he is to marry a girl of sixteen.

"As for the fraulein, who had it not been for my interference with nature's laws would now have been the wife of the guardsman and the mother doubt less of grown sons and daughters, she is a withered spinster. I can never forgive myself for being the cause of her misfortune.

"This is the reason why I have never either prosecuted my discovery or given it to the world. It remains for these Americans who are upsetting the traditions of centuries to proceed in their reckless course to defy nature's laws and to make themselves generally disagreeable to the rest of the world. I would like to get this fellow who has made this so called discovery, keep him young for a matter of thirty or forty years, then let old age come upon him at once to see how he would like the transition. So long as they confine themselves to colonies of bacteria or to guinea pigs or monkeys there is no harm done, but when it comes to jumping a young girl into an old woman please excuse me. I've had enough of

there is a fair outward movement now under way, and in the event this con tinues and improves, as in all probab ility it will, the chances are that during the next two months a very considerable portion of the Oregon crop will be marketed.

Whether a clean-up of the marketable surplus in this state can be offectoffered to decline to continue my treat- ed between now and the end of the season, however, is yet to be determined, but on the whole the outlook would seem to be rather favorable. In California and the states on the Mexican border the demand appears to be stiffening and broadening, and the prospect is for heavier rather than lighter shipments in that direction as the season advances. The size of the available supply in total of farmers' holdings, but that the supply is materially greater than that of this time a year ago is generally conceded. At the same time the market is in much better shape than a year ago, for crop failures last season in many of the Eastern states that experience which matures the in- have worked to the advantage of the Oregon growers, so the outlook can "Baron Wobel would not consent to hardly be regarded as unfavorable.
