Are the Cures Permanent? Read What the Patients Say:

"I was helpless from the giant disease Rheumatism. I managed to make my way on crutches to the Everett Theater, when Dr. Madison called for crutches. I went to the platform and he treated me for 30 minutes, after which I walked off the stage and went home without crutches. I went to work for B. H. Vollans on March 1, and feel fine. I was treated February 25, 1909.

"C. E. SMITH, 'Everett, Wash.'"

"I was on crutches for four and a half years. Dr. Madison treated me at the Everett Theater on Thursday night, February 26, 1909, and he broke my crutches and I walked out of the theater. I continue to walk without the aid of the crutches and am feeling fine.

"MRS. E. C. DEAN, '2035 Wetmore, Everett, Wash.'"

"Dr. Madison treated me for deafness, seven days ago. I am improved and hear as good as ever.

"GEORGE WADDELL, 'Everett, Wash.'"

The voice of the skeptic is now hushed, for they must now believe this man is a wonder, for they now can see what he really can do, and what the eyes see the heart must believe.

A Mathematical Wind.

One morning after a tempestuous night during which several trees were rooted up Dr. Vince, at Cambridge, met a friend. "Good morning, doctor," said the friend—"a terrible wind this!" "Yes, sir," replied the doctor, smiling, "quite a mathematical wind, for I see that it has extracted several roots!"—London Globe.

A Disagreeable Fly.

"This," said the tall browned pundit, indicating the entomological specimen impaled on a pin, "is the most baleful of all insects, the one that brings disappointment, spoils pleasure, causes divorce, deceives the credulous, frustrates hope and leaves the fondest expectations unfulfilled—the fly in the ointment."—Satire.

GOOD CHANCE FOR RECRUITS IN 1912

Big League Baseball Clubs Have Openings For Youngsters.

1911 CROP WAS VERY GOOD.

Several Real Phenoms Were Discovered Last Season—Out of Numerous Drafted and Purchased Players Some Good Ones Should Be Developed.

Judging from the lineups of the various big league teams, the drafted and purchased youngsters will have the chance of a lifetime to make good in 1912. No trades or deals of any special size have been made, and none seems to be in sight. None of the veteran material seems likely to put on enough extra steam next season to upset the present topnotch clubs, and the windup in each league, if left only to the present organizations, would come pretty near being identical with the finish of last October. If the leaders are to be dethroned, if any of the second class clubs are to come up among the heroes, it will have to be done through the agency of the new performers. If any dark horses come nosing to the front in either league the juvenile additions will have a leading part in the diddings.

Where are the Vean Greggs, the Joe Jacksons and the Grover Alexanders of 1912—waiting for their chance to show or doomed to remain invisible till the drafts of another season yank them blushing from their bat caves? Will there be a glorious rush of young talent to the front, or will the fine crop developed in 1911 have to be sufficient for two years instead of one?

It isn't often that as many live ones are produced as during the past season, and for this very reason the 1912 campaign may fail to show any startling stars among the juniors. Just look at the gang of healthy young bandits that were hatched in 1911: Alexander, Chalmers, Gregg, Jackson, Esmond, Kirke, Benton, Humphries, Olson, Krapp, Marsans, Almeida, Saker, Doyle, Cashion, Gainer, Drake, Bodie, O'Brien, Danforth, McCarthy, Severoid—oh, a regiment of the juvenile cusses! Is there much chance that the new crop will average as well as these performers? If so the old adage about "youth must be served" will be verified with a vengeance, and two or three more seasons will find the kids dominating the whole world of baseball.

It would seem almost impossible to duplicate such an array of bright young athletes, but some of the scouts insist that the younger crop is improving right along. A few years ago the opposite was generally understood. The country had been combed for star players, and they simply didn't happen. It was widely stated and probably the case that there were not enough real ball players to man two big leagues—that each league was, at most to a club, equipped with a few stars to the team and a lot of dead ones or never-could-bes. The youngsters were mostly pitchers, and the ambition to become a good infielder or even a good batter seemed to have died away.

Things have changed materially in the past four years. Plenty of fine brisemen are growing up and taking their proper places in the fast company. Good infielders, fast gardeners and now and then a classy catcher can be found among the rising athletes, and the new pitchers are of a superior pattern. During 1911 the clubs showed, thanks largely to this infusion of new blood, a lively pace and a measure of improvement over 1910. There was nothing, though, in the way of a real surprise party by any team. The same old teams were at the top, and neither new nor old talent could do anything to change the procession. And the same old teams will be in the first division next season unless the new blood shows up with startling strength and dazzling spirit. It's up to the youngsters of the drafted crop. They will have the chance of a lifetime to get famous during the next struggle.

Pushball For College Athletes.

The University of Georgia has purchased a $300 pushball for use during the winter months to keep the athletes in condition. It is six feet in diameter, its cover being made from the hide of six cows. The rubber bladder alone cost $100.

DRIED FRUIT MARKET UNUSUALLY ACTIVE

Notwithstanding the fact that the apple crop of the United States this season was greater than for many years, the dried fruit trade is feeling the effects of an unusually heavy European call.

For that reason stocks of dried or evaporated apples in coast markets are being well cleaned up. Even the heavy offerings that have been flooding the Eastern trade are now practically out of the way and prices are responding to the stronger influence. The market for dried prunes, while nominal is showing the highest price in years in the East, where the trade is crying for the coast to offer. Sales are being made in the New York market as high as 13 1-2c a pound, with practically no favorable sizes available except in small lots, at any price.

The extent of the shipments to New York can be seen when an official report made by the trade there shows that up to February 3 the receipts for the season were 609,975 cases compared with arrivals of 203,334 cases for the same period a year ago.
