How Is Your Watch?

If it is not running accurately perhaps it needs a little adjusting. Bring it in to us and we'll give it expert attention. A watchmaker should be a watchmaker, not a tinker. Ten years' experience in repairing all kinds of timepieces from the simplest to the most complicated have helped us to master the art of watch repairing.

OUR WATCH WORDS ARE CAREFULNESS, COURTESY AND CAPABILITY.

The owner of a much appreciated watch often hesitates about intrusting his timepiece to a repairer, and justly so, since a good watch may easily be spoiled by carelessness.

HOW A FEUD AROSE

By EVAN CAMERON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Quarrels are like fires. First there is a spark, then a tiny flame, then a snapping, then a blazing fire, then a roaring conflagration. And the worst kind of quarrels are those between friends.

Two pioneers, Daniel Simpson and Henry Underwood, emigrated with their families to the far west and entered land owned by the government. They had been schoolmates and owned farms side by side. There was no occasion for a dispute to arise between them so long as they remained in the east, for their boundaries had been surveyed and fixed generations ago, and being well fenced, the stock of neither could trespass upon the other's premises. Therefore their affection for each other grew stronger, and the families were further bound together by an engagement between Eliza Simpson and Frank Underwood, the oldest daughter of the one and oldest son of the other.

The two friends each entered a quarter section of land, the two farms being side by side. Simpson's land was more largely covered with timber than Underwood's, and this fact became a wedge between them. A railroad soon after their settlement on the land was projected to run alongside their property, and it became at once apparent that the timber would be valuable for ties. As soon as this was learned Underwood became interested in his boundary line covering as much of a wood as it could be stretched to cover, lying on the line between the two properties.

One morning Simpson went out toward his friend's property and found Underwood driving stakes on what he considered to be his own land. He protested, and Underwood declared that that was the dividing line and he was intending to begin the next morning to fell trees in order to be ready to supply the railroad with ties as soon as there was need. Simpson declared that every tree he cut beyond a certain point would be robbery. Then Underwood called Simpson a pig and the fight was on.

The next morning the ex-friends met on the line of dispute, each having an ax with which to fell timber, and before the day was over instead of felling trees they felled each other. Neither coming home to supper, their respective families went out to look for them and found their dead bodies, the skulls of both being cloven.

The trouble threw a gloom over both families. It was especially deplorable on account of the engagement of the two young people. Frank Underwood, in order that there might be no more trouble, sent to the county seat for a surveyor, who fixed the boundary. It turned out that neither his father nor his father's friend was right, the true boundary being a diagonal line with the one about which they contended.

Nor was this all that was mistaken in the matter. The disputants had not long been buried when the railroad to whose contractors they had expected to sell so many ties was discovered to be running the line several miles away from the property of either and through its own timberland.

One night when Eliza Simpson was sleeping at home she was awakened by the sound of axes being driven into the trunks of trees. The sound seemed to her to come from the direction of the boundary line. She sat up in bed and listened. The ax men were apparently vying with each other, each striving to strike more rapidly. Eliza got up and went into her mother's room to awaken her, but by the time she had succeeded in doing so the sound had ceased.

The next morning when she had told of what she had heard all considered that she had been dreaming. Nevertheless she declared that she had heard the axes distinctly, the sounds coming from a point between the Simpsons' and the Underwoods' dwellings. When she told her lover about it he declared that if any such sounds had existed he would have heard them more readily than his fiancée, since the Underwood house was nearer the line on which the timber bordered than the Simpsons'. Eliza, who was positive as to what she had heard, gave him a sharp reply, and he left her in anger.

Eliza Simpson heard again the sounds of axes on the boundary line. Since the double murder of the heads of the two families the conditions had been embarrassing, and the day after, Eliza's having heard the mysterious ax men again Mrs. Simpson went to Mrs. Underwood and told of the occurrence. Mrs. Underwood had been under a strain ever since the catastrophe and upon Mrs. Simpson's visit lost her self control completely, declaring that she believed Simpson had murdered her husband, who acted simply in self defense.

The families of the men who had killed each other now came to open warfare. The match between Eliza and Frank was broken off, and no one of the Simpsons spoke to an Underwood. The members of the younger generation were becoming men and women, and the generation after them inherited the quarrel. As the families multiplied the feud spread. A clergyman, preaching on the matter to the third generation, declared that he believed the two murderers had continued their quarrel as spirits, and Satan had made their axes audible in order to transfer their quarrel to mortals.
