A STORY AND ITS MORAL.

The fresh air propagandists have never had a more complete demonstration of the soundness of their theories than they are getting now in the case of Charles W. Morse. Mr. Morse, it will be remembered, was in the directory of the Knickerbocker and other New York banks whose failure is said to have precipitated the financial stringency of 1907. There is excellent reason for believing that Morse had unwittingly made himself the chosen victim of a sacrifice, because of his arrogance and unpopularity and his constant echo of the old Tweed question of "What are you going to do about it?" The interests had found Morse and his methods too heavy a load to carry. At any rate, the Morse group of banks went into partial liquidation and Morse himself was indicted under what looked then, and still looks, like a determination on the part of men of sense in large affairs to wipe him off the map. His conviction was easy, because, for a long time, he seemed unable to realize that he was in danger. He convicted himself. And the court, as courts generally do in such cases, imposed a sentence of marked severity. He began serving this sentence in the federal prison at Atlanta, but he had not been in that place half a year until petitions for his pardon were in circulation. All of these were incontinently turned down by Mr. Taft, who, being familiar with the record, could see nothing in the career of Morse calling for executive condoning. Therein he coincided with the opinion of all intelligent people who had followed the Morse case. When a pardon was seen to be out of the question the appeal was made for commutation. It was represented at Washington that Morse was dying, not slowly, but surely, and quickly, under stress of the confinement of prison life. At first the president failed to hearken to these pleas. Finally, convinced through the representations of physicians and others he believed to be reputable, that if Morse was not quickly taken out in an automobile he would have to be taken out in a hearse, he signed a paper commuting the remainder of the Morse

William Jennings Bryan and Colonel James McClurg Guffey

Photos by American Press Association.

ONE of the most interesting personalities at the recent conference of the Democratic national committee was Colonel James M. Guffey, against whose election as member for Pennsylvania William Jennings Bryan made an unsuccessful fight. In appearance the colonel is more a southerner than a Pennsylvanian, a circumstance explained by the fact that he spent part of his youth in the south, where he acquired the habit of wearing broad brimmed soft hats and flowing neckties that have even in broadening holdings in Texas, Kansas and California as well as in Pennsylvania. The photographs of the two colonels were taken during a recess of the conference, which was held in Washington.

Heart to Heart Talks.

By EDWIN A. NYE.

HIS DREAM. I remember a dream written, I think by the late Myrtle Reed that has stuck in my memory.

A dissatisfied young man dreamed that he was in a great factory. The belts were off, the machinery stopped. There was rubbish on the floor, and the people stood about complaining.

Each wanted the other's job. The shipping clerks wanted to cut out the samples that were sent out in big envelopes. The girls who cut out the samples wanted to draw the designs.

The designer wanted to be doorkeeper so he could get more air. The man who oiled the machinery wanted to wash the windows for a change. The busy messengers wanted to run the machines. And so on.

Suddenly a strong voice called out, "Each of you back to his job!" Hestitatingly the workers obeyed. Presently all was harmony. Each was doing his work, and doing it well.

Then as they worked, dreamed the dreamer, the spirit of love entered into them, and they began to sing at their tasks. Each of them not only did his own work, but helped his neighbor. Instead of complaining each was eager to do and to help.

The dreamer awoke. He knew it was only a dream, but the teaching was plain. If each one of us did his work in the spirit of love and cheerfulness there would be harmony and the millennium would be here.

Is it not so? If your task is hard, nevertheless, make up your mind to do it faithfully and in the spirit of love. Dignify it by your fidelity. It is possible to learn to love even a hard task.

You can do better work? Possibly. But you cannot do the greater work successfully if you cannot do the lesser work successfully. If you do the lesser task faithfully the time will come when you may demand and command the better job.

It is your job, big or little. If you complain of it and envy others you will not succeed and you will sow the seeds of discontent and discord in the hearts of your fellows.

Each to his job! The harmony of things requires that you do your work, however menial, and dignify it with a song. Some other worker, drinking of your spirit and hearing your song, may take heart again.

Proved. Professor—Which is the most delicate of the senses? Pupil—The touch. Professor—Prove it. Pupil—When you sit on a pin you can't see it, you can't hear it, you can't taste it, but it's there.

MAZDA LAMPS MAKE LIGHT WORK. "I find that kitchen work is a pleasure rather than a drudgery," says the housekeeper, "now that this wonderful MAZDA LAMP brightens the room like sunshine. This new lamp certainly is a blessing to the housekeeper. It COSTS NO MORE to burn than the ordinary incandescent lamp and radiates nearly THREE TIMES as much light. Canal Tolls May Be Too High to Attract Foreign Trade

By CLAUDE CASIMIR-PERIER, Son of Former French President

WHETHER France and other European countries can operate through the Panama canal will depend, of course, upon the canal TOLLS and the cost of coal. This latter will loom large in figuring out the conditions by which trade will be influenced.

Until now coal on the western coast of South America is three or four times dearer than at European ports. Take the Mediterranean ports, where coal can be had for an average of $4 a ton, and compare it with Valparaiso, where it is from $14 to $16 a ton. The coal at the latter port is mostly imported from England, though some small shipments come from Australia.

IT IS A QUESTION WHETHER THE TOLLS WILL BE SO LARGE THAT THEY WILL OFFSET ANY SAVING IN TIME AND COST OF OPERATION OVER THE SHORTER ROUTE.

If there is a canal charge, say, of $1 a ton, the dividing line making one route as cheap as the other would be Callao, far to the northward of Valparaiso. In other words, with the added expense of a canal charge the steamship going through the canal could ONLY GO AS FAR AS CALLAO FOR THE SAME COST OF OPERATION that the other vessel, having no toll to pay, could come through Magellan, go to Valparaiso and then on to Callao.
