SANE TARIFF REVISION.

It is a safe proposition that any reasonably intelligent man who, without prejudice, will examine the nchievements of the Taft administration in the direction of procuring just and reasonable tariff revision, will be compelled by the facts to give his cordial approval to the Taft policy. But how many have followed the de--termined and successful effort of the President to secure a tariff board and to procure from Congress the funds ary to enable it to develop the facts?

Had not the impatient members of the community intrusted the control of the House to the Democrats, concrete results of President Taft's achievements in this direction would already have been written on the statutes. With a Democratic House and a Republican Senate, it may be that no tarilff legislation will be enacted at this session, but if there is not, it will be solely because the Democrats are unwilling to father a revision in accordance with the findings of the tariff board.

And yet it is argued, and with rea-And yet it is argued, and with reason, that even those who espouse the Democratic view that there should be St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church wholesale slashing of the tariff, will gain the end they wish more certainly and more expeditiously by the Taft method than by that of Mr. Underwood and his colleagues in the House, for it is pointed out that were the Democrats in control of the three branches of the government, and were they to pass such legislation as they have put through the House, there would inevitably follow another reaction, precisely like that which followed the enactment of the Wilson bill, and another Dingley bill would

If, on the contrary, the revision of the tariff is effected slowly, and systematically, every step being supported by a report of the tariff board showing the reasons therefore, such revision will not cause a reaction. but will stand until the tariff board shows that still further reductions should be made.
