

ICE HOCKEY IS GAINING IN FAVOR

Colleges and Universities Think Game Is Here to Stay.

YALE HAS NEW $12,000 RINK

New Haven Arena Is One of the Largest in Country—Princeton May Erect One—Game Seems to Have Firm Hold on Collegians.

The tendencies at big universities and colleges throughout the country is to boom hockey. Time was when only a few varsity sevens were seen on the ice, but nowadays most every institution, whether large or small, goes in for the Canadian game.

Since Yale has built a new $12,000 rink, which is one of the largest arenas of its kind in this country, it is very evident that the New Haven men see a great future for the game.

Yale appears to have gone about the project in the right way, as the arena is a most up to date one in every detail.

When the artificial plant is installed it will then be possible for Yale to increase her playing dates, the result being that Yale men will be able to see more games at home than has been the case in the past.

Princeton needs a rink badly, as the team, like Yale in the past, must derive most of its early training at the local rink. The Tigers cannot depend on Carnegie lake, as the weather in this section is too uncertain.

Harvard, it is thought, eventually will build an indoor rink, although it has a first class outdoor rink in the stadium. Hockey is well thought of at Harvard, and it would not be a big surprise if the alumni some time in the future made the Crimson a rink.

At Dartmouth hockey is in vogue, because the Green team has no suitable place for practice. The students have appealed to the alumni, if the sport is to be retained it is most certain that better provisions will have to be made for hockey.

The One Thing Forgotten

By OSCAR COX

There was once a widow who had one son, who was all she had in the world to love and to love her. Being a woman she knew her sex well and was afraid that some designing girl would snare her son and get him away from her.

"There," she said as she saw him walk away. "I don't see how he can get into trouble. If he meets a girl she will laugh at him and go on. If he follows her he cannot touch her with either his hands or his lips. I am well pleased with what I have done."

She followed him with her eyes till he had passed out of sight, then went into the house. The young man went on, and though his mother was right in expecting persons to laugh at him she did not count upon their wondering why he was so equipped. The children booted at him, the men shouted and the women made facetious remarks.

On a stifle that he must pass sat a girl. He could see through the eye holes in the pumpkin that she was comely. As he approached she remained directly in his way and did not move aside for him to pass.

"I am going to market," he said, "to sell these eggs for my mother. Will you be good enough to permit me to go over the stifle?"

"First tell me why you wear that strange helmet on your head."

"My mother put it there. Why I do not know, and, being a dutiful son, I did not ask."

loose in your hands instead of in a basket?"

"That, too, was my mother's doing, but she did not tell me why."

"I wonder what you look like?"

"Other men, I suppose. But please let me pass or I shall be late to market and miss an opportunity to sell my eggs."

"I prefer that you should sit beside me on the stifle. The market is open all day, and you need not hurry."

"My mother has always chided me against sitting beside comely maidens. She says they are like the outer waters of a whirlpool; at first a man does not realize that he is being drawn in, and when he does realize it it is too late."

"Oh, your mother said that, did she? How can your mother remember what she was when a maid since she has a son as old as you?"

"Let me go on."

"I have a mind to walk with you a short distance. I am curious to know why your mother so encumbered you, and by speech with you I may get a clew."

"Do so. Only do not delay me."

She permitted him to cross the stifle and walked with him till they reached a wood, but she learned nothing from him as to why he traveled in such an unusual fashion or whether he was handsome or ugly.

"I must return now," she said. "You being a stranger I would not dare go into the wood with you. You might kiss me."

"How could I do that," he asked, "when my mouth is covered?"

"At any rate you might put your arm around my waist."

"Put my arm around your waist with my hands full of eggs? I could not do that!"

I might set the eggs down gently, then take out my knife and cut away the pumpkin."

"You would not do that. You would force me to hold the eggs for you."

"Why would I force you to hold the eggs?"

"That I might not be able to defend myself from your efforts to kiss me."

"I see," said the young man. "It would not be safe for you to go to the wood with me, so we must part."

"How much do you want for your eggs?"

"A shilling."

She took a shilling from her purse, and he placed the eggs in her hands, taking the coin.

"Oh, dear! she exclaimed. "Why did I trust you? Your hands are now free. You can relieve yourself of your helmet and kiss me."

He proved the charge by doing that very thing.

When the young man returned to his mother he told her that he had a sweetheart and recounted what had taken place.

"How foolish I have been!" moaned the old woman. "One thing I forgot."

"What was that, mother?"

"Curiosity. She wished to see your face."

MODERATE POTATO MOVEMENT SHOWN

For a week to date a moderate movement is reported in the potato market, the bulk of the shipments outside of the state going to California, Arizona, and New Mexico.

In California the call is for only first quality stock and for potatoes of this sort local buyers are paying $5.35 to $1.50 at shipping points.

One of the leading buyers, however, held that $1.40 was the limit at this time. Stock not quite measuring up to standard is being taken over at $1.25 to $1.35. The growers are said to be letting go in a limited way, but many are still bullish in their views regarding the future of the market.
